He went down to the "Dew Drop Inn," but Wood had made his escape. Brundage continued to Wellsville; where he found and arrested him. The prison er was brought back to Andover where he spent the night in the lock-up. Wood's resort was the most-unique! drinking place ever established in Al-basement of an obscure farm house, it was opened for business, with the Inn" was known on the road all the way from Buffalo to New York. Conducted along crude lines, a place for the dispensing of liquids of an obscure and suspicious origin, it was a hang-out where the various elements / of village society met on a common basis with a mutual purpose. Occasionally women of leisure were imported for evening soirces, and then the sedate echoes of the valley were set attune by the bacchanalian noises that rose above the revelry. During these sessions the demand for buoze was so insistent at times that the popping of corks sounded like the rattle of light artillery. All thru the night the two roads leading from Line place echoed with the roistering of homeward-bound pilgrims, each currying unmistakeable momentos of a joyous occasion.
