HOTLY CONTESTED BASE BALL GAME

LYCEUM TEAM OF WELLSVILLE
AND ANDOVER TEAM PLAY A
VERY CLOSELY CONTESTED
GAME HERE SATURDAY.

For nine innings there was a sure-enough game of ball between the All-Stars of Andover and the Lyceum boys of Wellsville at the Richardson oval last Saturday afternoon. Immediately following which that celebrated aeronaut, William Cyrus Perkins, made a balloon ascension from first base that thrilled the multitude and caused manager William Enstace Snyder to weep briny tears of regret, while Charles Lever and his well-trained chorus of knockers rendered that touching ditty, entitled: "I Told You So."

Well, really, it was painful. Andover held Wellsville down to a one-run tie for nine innings. The game had been snappy and devoid of the usual supply of amateur errors, then Aeronaut Perkins made his ascent and by the time he landed the Lyceum team had annexed six scores. Andover took its last chance at bat, and after four youths had faced the Tipperary lad who pitched for Wellsville, the sad, sad tale had been writ, and all that remained in the way of excitement was to figure out whether you would ride or walk back to town. Aeronaut Perkins, it may be casually mentioned, floated in on his perfectly good balloon.

The tenth inning started with the score tied, one and one. McAndrew, imported from South Hill to Wellsville, went to bat and rolled an easy one to Mr. Perkins on first base. Right here the ascension began, and when the aeronaut and his crew landed over the hill and far away, Wells-every man but one had been at least to second base. Did you murmur "Awful?" Your murmur has the ring of variety. It was atrocious.

In justice to Aeronaut Perkins, be it said that he was not entirely responsible. Deery's pass to Childs, two men on bases, DeBarbari's two-bagger and Harrington's single added to the confusion and resulted in much of the run making.

Here is the sad tale in detail:

CORONER BACON BADLY BURNED

PROMINENT CANASERAGA PHYSICIAN INJURED BY EXPLOSION OF CONTENTS OF PRESCRIPTION BOTTLE HE WAS COMPOUNDING.

(Canaseraga Times)

Our community was shocked last Saturday evening, when it became known on the streets that Dr. A. T. Bacon had been terribly burned by the explosion of the contents of a bottle which he had been compounding for use as a horse medicine. About seven o'clock Dr. Bacon was putting up a prescription, for Samuel Perry, which contained blue vitriol, corrosive sublimate, iodine and other elements and had completed the compound and started to shake together the contents of the bottle when a loud explosion was started by a loud explosion.

The doctor was seen to stagger blindly and put his hands to his face. On rushing to his aid Mrs. Bacon, her children and others who were present saw that the doctor's face, hands and neck had been covered with the fiery liquid. Some of the liquid had entered the doctor's eyes and his suffering was excruciating. Dr. O. S. Fratt responded immediately to a call for medical aid and did all in his power to alleviate the suffering of his brother practitioner. It was at first supposed that the doctor would lose the sight of his right eye, but Dr. Coyle of Hornell, who visited the sufferer Sunday was of the opinion that both eyes were safe and would soon be in their normal condition.

The last account as we go to press indicates that the doctor's recovery will be rapid.

ANNUAL HARVEST HOME A SUCCESS

FINE ADDRESSES, NICE WEATHER
GOOD MUSIC, SPLENDID DINNER AND A LARGE CROWD THE FEATURES OF THE DAY.

In spite of the weather man and the local barometers, the Thirty-second Annual Harvest Home Day was blessed with good weather. It would seem as though it was predestined and fore-ordained that this annual event should be given a day, since in the thirty-two years there have been only two observed by the Presbyterian Society as Harvest Home days that it has rained.

The crowd this year was up to the usual standard and everything moved with its usual neatness and despatch. There were many out-of-town guests, the speeches were unusually good, the music excellent the dinner delicious and well served, and the proceeds very gratifying to those who had the affair in charge. The business men of the town very kindly closed their places during the afternoon and the day was thus made a local holiday. The remarkable manner in which the whole community supports this annual event is a fine indication of their appreciation of the institution and clearly indicates that it has a long and glorious future before it.

The Executive Committee wish through the News to express their grateful appreciation of the generous contributions and hearty support which the entire community has given them in their work of conducting the Thirty-second Annual Harvest Home. Probably a thousand people were present and listened to the two addresses. The first by Hon. Sherman Moreland of Elmira. His subject being "Good Citizenship," and was well received and appropriate to the occasion. Mr. Moreland was formerly majority leader in the New York State Assembly and is a warm personal friend of Assemblyman Phillips of this village, and during his remarks paid him a very flattering tribute for the work Mr. Phillips had done in the Assembly. He said that he was second to none in the assembly.

A. Cameron McKenzie, D. D., LL. D. President of Elmira College, for women was then introduced, and among the many good things which he said were the following

Dr. McKenzie's Address.

I want to tell you a story. I do not deal much in stories, but if you see the point to this story I think it will be of some benefit to you. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth there lived in England a woman of strong character and of great wisdom. A woman fitted to be an American mother, although then she had never seen this fair land of ours. She had in her mind the equality of the sons and daughters of her land. She felt keenly that English women were entitled to an education as much as English men. She thought that the seats of learning in that country ought to be open to women, that they were intellectually the equals of men. That woman has a larger influence in this great commonwealth of ours in these United States, than any woman who ever lived upon this fair earth.

With this idea in her mind, of the education of women, had she advocated it and completed it, many changes might have taken place, but after a little time things got so uncomfortable in England that a little band of men and women formed what is known at this time as Independents. That woman was one of that little band. Her ambition was the education of her sex. She became one of that band that went to Holland and there she advocated the same thing. Her great mission in life was to advance the education of woman. She did not live to see the time when the education of men and woman would be equal in this land. She taught her daughters that they should teach their children and their children's children that there should be a college where women should receive an education similar to that given to men. In due time her descendant, Phoebe Allen Hinsdale, imbued with the notion of her mother ancestor, told her son never to rest until he had seen established in this land a college for women, where they should be taught the arts and sciences as men were taught them, and that man son in 1852, with three clergymen, came to the city of Elmira and they erected the institution which I have the honor to serve in my humble way. The first institution on this side of the world where women could receive the same education that is given to men at Harvard and Yale. Now that woman, in her humble sphere, in England, did a service the extent of which we can never know until the works of all men shall be opened before the world. She was more than Princess, she wanted to see the light and to send it to womanhood in this land, and that college which was erected in Elmira is now the mother of Vassar, and then came Wellesley and Smith and Bryn Mawr, and now there are over a hundred colleges in the United States teaching women the arts and sciences.

Now, I want to say one or two words along this line. If there is a father within the reach of my voice who says that it is more profitable and more sensible to educate the sons in college than the daughters, I should like to get that father under my microscope. My friends, who does not know that the mother of George Washington was greater than George Washington? who does not know that the mother of Abraham Lincoln was greater than Abraham Lincoln? Who does not know that the source is greater than the effect? Who does not know that Abraham Lincoln and George Washington and other great men are ready to lay down at the feet of their mothers all that they owe their greatness to? Motherhood is greater in the world than manhood. Manhood has been given all the advantages until about one hundred years ago and they have done little compared with what womanhood would have done if they had had the advantages of learning. Now one more thought. Education is one thing and technical learning is another thing. The man who has only technical learning is not a proper being but a dreamer. The man who has technical learning is a half educated man, but the man or woman who puts together technical learning and general education is the man or woman of the larger vision, of the complete mind. The technical learning comes from a study of the arts and sciences under well directed instruction so that these two put together make a citizenship such as Mr. Moreland was pleading for and such as the world is crying out for today. The world has become of larger consequence because of the power of an educated community, the education of its mothers, of its sons and daughters and that is the reason that I am here, not especially to plead for Elmira, because we are running over, but I am pleading for the college education for every woman, not as a means for earning a living, but to learn to live right and wisely, how to understand the great things of art and literature and history and science; how to be self-contained in your appreciation of the best things of life.

THE FUTURE OF THE ERIE ROAD

POWERFUL FINANCIAL BACKERS
NOW TAKING HOLD OF THE
SYSTEM AND WILL UNDOUBT-EDLY PUT IT TO THE FRONT.

Wall Street observes with interest the gradual unfolding of a plain for the strengthening of the Erie Railroad. Starting with holders of the prior lien and general lien bonds on June 30, a powerful financial group has purchased or offered to purchase the maturing interest coupons until no less than eight different issues of the Erie road are included in the undertaking, temporarily relieving the road of interest charges which between June 30, and September 1 amounted to $3,518,514. This plan will continue.

Wrapped up in these bonds is some intensely interesting financial history, recalling past comedy and tragedy connected with the Erie corporation. All that, however, may be dismissed. The plan of the present deals with the upbuilding and future development of one of the country's oldest transportation systems. The present situation is in nowise comparable with the past. Though bankers are buying Erie coupons, the Erie road is not in default nor is there a likelihood of such.

Like all other railway properties the historic Erie has felt the effects of business depression, and felt it severely for it was engaged in the transportation industry. But the Erie has kept up its maintenance charges and operating efficiency. Temporarily relieved in the matter of fixed charges, which, devoted to the rounding out of improvements, means much in increased earnings, the foundation is being laid for a better and a stronger property in the future than in the past.
