If Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, Democratic candidate for governor, is consistent, then he must vote for his Republican opponent for governor, Mr. Hughes. The latter is Mr. Chanler's ideal of a chief executive of the Empire State. He has declared this conviction on many occasions. His admiration for Governor Hughes is that o the pupil for the master. He has called on the voters of his own party as well as the people of the entire state "not, to be blinded by petty partisan prejudices in selecting the men to fill our offices." And then he has pointed t Governor Hughes as "an honest man, faithful to the trust imposed in him." Having found such a man, this candid, sincere, broad minded young man admonishes the people of the state adhere to the good that has been vouchsafed them in these words: "Let us rather seek out an honest man and then, having found such a man, keep him where he is needed." Again says of Governor Hughes, "I feel it at bonor to take off my hat to that man and proclaim him one who has worked bard and faithfully, not for his party but for the people of the state of New
