Hamilton B. Williams.

If Mary, Mother, could have known — (She crooned a love-song, well-content) The hard toad He must trudge alone, With load His love had dared, forspent,— What would that Mother's heart have felt?

Her soul rejoiced when Beth'lem's star Strewed garlands on His face. 'T was well She saw not journey's end . . . afar, Nor heard, Oh Mother! passing bell. What would that Mother's heart have felt?

Well, Calv'ry's Hill across no dream Of her's it's awful shadows swept..: Her vision, sheened with morning-gleam, Shewed throne for Him who smiling slept. What would that Mother's heart have felt!

Oh, gray and drear was Mary's hearth; Her Sharon Rose had flowered to blight! But had she heard the children's mirth That gariands His marred face with light, What would that Mother's heart have felt?

And had she known her child would guide Men blind and wand'ring, faraway, Unto a gracious Father's side — (Oh, children laugh and sing and play,)

What would that Mother's heart have felt! And had she known a World's release Lay in His keeping, had she known That from her hearth the Prince of Peace

Would go to make all hearths His Throne,

What would that Mother's heart have felt!
