MAN'S GREATEST LOVE

By ARTHUR W. BEER.

As he fled along the bleak highway the one awful thought that possessed him was the utter hopelessness of the situation into which he had been so abruptly plunged. He had not meant to kill him. Ah, no! such a thought had never found lodgment in his brain for an instant.

Why should he harm the father of the woman he loved?

He had gone more to plead his cause with the old man. Words had passed between them, and the old man, in senile rage, had attacked him. Even toiled but poor old dad. TO HONOR FATHER AT LAST

Movement Under Way to Place Neg! lected Parent on Pedestal and Strew Roses at His Feet

At last poor old father is to have his day. For these many moons we have been singing the praises of motherand deservedly—and telling of what a dreary world it would be without her, and all the while father has been standing around as unnoticed and as neglected as the bridegroom at the wedding. He has been looked upon, or rather tolerated, as a necessary evil-

Indeed, he has been spoken of, in somé quarters at least, in terms of reproach and derision. We all remember the beautiful ballad which blatantly called attention to the fact that everybody the author had made a remarkable dis-share with the world. Now all this is to be changed and dad is to be placed on a pedestal a flowers laid at his unworthy feet and
