FORTUNATE ISLES Little friends, have you heard of a beautiful clime, Where the birds always singof the jocund June-time. And where everyone's friendswait with welcoming smiles?

That's the land in the West called the Fortunate Isles Have you seen the sun set in a glory of gold? That's a bit of the beauty out Yonder, I'm told, That slips out of the gates of that fair summerland.... Little friends, if we're good, there, someday we shall stand.

Oh its far and its near to the Fortunate Isles. It may be but a step, it may be weary nfiles, To the land where the sky like an amethyst glows, Where the wind's lips are sweet with the breath of-the rose.

The great sea to his breast holds that beautiful isle, And he sings a deep-toned lullaby all the while. Have you heard in the surge of the tides a weird rune? That's the echo on earth of the faraway tune.

Have you heard on the mountains at night in the wind A sad plaint that gave wondering....what was behind The star's marge? and you wished words could tell what the hear' Glimpsed through gates that that were drawn for a moment apar

In this country of Burdens and Sorrowful ways Hearts grow weary, and long for the Dream-Country's Days. Little friends, we must wait—call will come soon-while; One can't go when he would to his Fortunate Isle.

But we'll find peace the deeper for tempests that rage And our rest will be sweet for our long priigrimage Why, tomorrow may wake us with beckoning emiles And we'll turn us glad homeward to Fortunate Isles
