PRISONERS OF WAR.

They Are Absolutely Safe After Being Taken by the Enemy.

As soon as a man is taken prisoner of war he becomes neutral and must not be killed. No matter whether the country holding him prisoner is defeated and its army almost wiped out, all the prisoners in custody are absolutely safe, owing to the rule of war which makes them neutral.

Of course, anything connected with medical ambulance work is kept strictly neutral. Hospitals are considered neutral as long as they contain only sick or wounded and must be respected by the belligerents, but if a hospital should be used as a military office it immediately loses its neutrality and is open to fire.

As sick or wounded persons are regarded as noncombatants, it naturally follows that those who tend and look after them—such as nurses and doctors—are also regarded so. The superintendents of the medical staff and those engaged in looking after the hospital and the transport of sick and wounded are also neutral.

There is one rather queer point in connection with Red Cross work. A soldier might fire at one of the enemy, whom by some chance he knew quite well to be a surgeon, and he would be within his rights in killing him—provided the surgeon had no Red Cross badge on his arm. If, however, the badge was there and the soldier fired he would be breaking one of the rules of war.

If, while seeing to the wounded, an ambulance attendant were accidentally killed or disabled an ordinary soldier would be allowed to take his place, and, provided he took the trouble to transfer the Red Cross badge from the other man's arm to his own, he would become for the whole a noncombatant. Clergymen are considered neutral, and as long as they devote their services to cheering the wounded and dying and assisting in hospital work they are quite safe. Neither may they be killed while engaged in conveying the wounded away from the front. They must not, however, be in the field for any other purpose than those, for by the rules of war it is held that their cheery words and exhortations may have an unduly encouraging effect upon the men and so give them an advantage.—Pearson's Weekly.

"Painting the Town Red."

"That expression, 'Painting the town red,' is not," writes a correspondent, "the creation of some unknown cockney genius, as some would seem to infer. Its birth has been traced to 'The Divine Comedy.' Dante, led by Virgil, comes to the cavernous depths of the place swept by a mighty wind, where those are confined who have been the prey of their passions. Two faces arise from the mist—the faces of Francesca and Paolo. 'Who are ye?' cries Dante in alarm, and Francesca replies sadly, 'We are those who have painted the world red with our sins.'—London News.

Milton's "Paradise Lost."

Milton was blind when he composed that immortal work, "Paradise Lost." His daughters were his amanuenses. Nor did they merely write what he dictated, but they read to him from day to day whatever classical or other authors he might wish to consult in the way of reference, or to relax or invigorate his mind. But reading to their father the Greek and Latin authors must have been very tedious to them, as it is said they were quite ignorant of both those ancient languages.

It Doesn't Turn Up.

An employer, having occasion to consult a detective regarding one of his clerks who had absconded, was asked to describe the missing man. "Well," said the employer, "his hair is dark, face rather sallow, and he has a Roman nose."
"I am afraid you will not succeed in finding him if he has a Roman nose," replied the detective, "because a Roman nose never turns up."

Overlooked.

"I don't want to make you unhappy, my dear," said Mr. Willerby, as he ran over his monthly accounts, "but you must be more careful. Your motorcar is really costing too much money."

"Yes, Henry, my love," replied Mrs. Willerby, "I suppose it is costing a good deal, but just think of all it saves us in carfare."—Judge.

Stretching.
Stretching is good exercise. When a man cannot wake up in the middle of the night or in the morning and take a good stretch he ought to kick himself into some sort of comprehensibility. A vigorous stretch in bed or out of it is calculated to excite all the nerves, muscles, veins and arteries of the entire system, thereby stimulating the heart action and enlivening the dormant brain. You may not know that the brain sleeps. It requires a stirring up. All the cords and tendons in the body need rest. They need awakening also. All the vitals must be aroused. Stretching is a first rate rouser. Stretch, stretch, stretch!

Education.
I consider a human soul without education like marble in a quarry, which shows none of its inherent beauties until the skill of the polisher fetches out the colors, makes the surface shine and discovers every ornamental cloud spot and vein that runs throughout the body of it. Education, after the same manner, when it works upon a noble mind, draws out to view every latent virtue and perfection, which without such helps are never able to make their appearance and would otherwise be lost.—Selected.

History.
When Sir Robert Walpole retired into private life time hung heavy on his hands, and Horace exerted himself to amuse his father. One day he offered to read to him.
"What will you read, child?" asked Sir Robert wearily.
Horace suggested history.
"No, no," replied the veteran statesman; "not history, Horace; that can't be true."

Black and White Pepper.
The reason why white pepper is considered better than black is not only because it looks and tastes better, but because it is less irritating to the stomach. Both are made from the same kind of peppercorns. In the white, however, the outer husk has been removed before grinding.

Practical

E. H. Burritt of the Burritt Department Store, Le Roy, N. Y., Before W. N. Y. P. On Successful Advertising

E. H. Burritt, who gave the thing concise, practical and the applicable paper before the meeting of the Western New Newspaper Publishers' association at Rochester, is one of the Burritt company, who operates a large department store at Le Roy. His was based upon actual practice rather than theory, the company having an average of three columns of advertising matter weekly for the four years, with excellent results. A splendid increase in business. Mr. Burritt's paper was one of the large number of editors and publishers present to have the best delineation of advertising presented before the organization. In a very large measure, the of the country merchant will be aided by his ability to grasp of the great importance of the kind of advertising, in such papers as may be available. It is extremely slow to see the from which comes his opportunity. He has wasted va-of money on what he has called advertising, perhaps, feeling that helping build up the town by selling the home paper through its using columns or by considering newspaper advertising is one of the most serious evils that had its way into the program of a retail store. Today you find many country merchants and same copy several weeks session and complaining that using does not pay. We believe due to laziness fully as much ignorance. It takes a careful and copy to be worthy of a run once; very few are worth it. Not infrequently, you will see advertisements that make you think of advertising to make a man for himself by trying to get 7. Jokes have their place, but in the copy that is written for merchandise. Others believe that occasional advertisement is the best brings best results. True, but may get some business, but of the kind that will bring no results. Those who appreciate the value of advertising that rings true have eased with the nation-wide that is being made to stamp out advertising. If you stomer over your counter—the truth year after year. I confidence in you and will stand with his patronage. This od in your advertising as we community will read you a matter of education as a parent, to the end that they after buyers on account of the information found week week. If there is ever any in a year after year, you will usually build a reputation that and greater financial stress serve bank account. The sporadic advertiser is quickly discouraged and will not newspaper advertising do any. The hardest rock in a few rapid strokes, but visits of a continuous and steady stream of patient worker. The same holds good in advertising who does thorough and advertising week after week after year will win. The
