Fine Finish.

The man who writes thrilling melodramas rushed into the manager's office in a state of great excitement.
"I've got it," he slanted triumphantly. "I've got it!"
"Got what?" asked the surprised manager.
"Why, the sensation of the year. In the third act of my new play, there is a mill scene. Harold Headlight, the hero, casts the villain down into the yawning jaws of two great emery wheels."
The manager grinned.
"Emery wheels?" he chuckled.
"Then, I suppose, he has a fine finish?"
"Yes, very fine. In fact, he comes out a polished villain."—Chicago News.

He Fooled Himself.

A station master who had been taking a short holiday at some distance from his own station went to catch the last train homeward and on entering the station found a lady trying to turn the handle of one of the compartments. The station master rushed to her assistance, opened the door, bundled the passenger in, slammed the door to and then, by force of habit, waved his hand to the guard and stood calmly on the platform till the train had steamed out of sight. He had to walk home, and the other station master laughed.—London Standard.

When She Made Cake.

"This is lovely angel food," said she, tasting the cake at the high tea. "Did you make it? Wonderful! I never tried to make angel food but once. I took all day to make it, walking very lightly while it was in the oven, hardly breathing. Then when it was done I put it in the side-board. The next morning they had to use a derrick to move the sideboard in order to sweep under it. That is, that's the story my husband tells about it. You know how husbands are."—New York Press.
