

LEE'S LAST ORDER.

It Was Not Exactly a Military One, but It Was Obeyed.

General Lee's last order, and when and why it was delivered, were recounted by a former officer in Lee's army at a reunion of the northern and southern veterans at Gettysburg. In the closing days of the war Governor Wise of Virginia, at the call of his state and despite his age, joined Lee's troops. In his younger days Lee was a great favorite of the governor, and the latter was made a brigadier general by the former. He fought with reckless bravery and was fiercely engaged in the last fighting of the war when a rumor of Lee's surrender reached him.

"Then," as the story runs, "filled with astonishment and anxiety, he turned his horse at the close of the fight and spurred in search of his commander in chief. As he splashed along the muddy road, unkempt, unshaven and himself a spatter of mud after forty-eight hours in the saddle, he chanced upon General Lee and his staff on their way to arrange the details of the surrender with General Grant.

"The fiery old autocrat, too much overborne by tumultuous emotions to give a thought to military discipline and forgetting that General Lee was not still his young protégé, pushed through the circle of officers and riding up to his commander blurted out, 'General, what's this talk I hear about surrendering?' "It is true," replied Lee sadly, and overlooking the old warrior's gross breach of discipline he added, 'I am just on my way to meet General Grant.'

"Surrender!" ejaculated the old governor. "I am astounded, sir! And what am I to do? Tell me, what am I to do, sir?"

"As General Lee gazed upon his overwrought subordinate, his eye, even in that hour of bitter trial, caught the ludicrous aspect of the doughty old soldier as he sat there, his bare head a tangled mass of withered knots, his face a dirty mottle of mud, streaked like the top-knot of a masquerade, with powder smearing crazily athwart his features, his whole appearance in grotesque contrast to the tragic sorrow that overwhelmed him. The ghost of a smile flitted over the sad countenance of the commander as he replied gently to the old general's insistent query, 'I think, general, you had better go home and wash your face!'

"And with a nod he departed, leaving the astonished old soldier with a painful miscellany of feelings to carry out the last order of General Lee." — Youth's Companion.

Yarmouth Rows.
Great Yarmouth contains what is said to be the narrowest street in the world, known as Kitty Witches' row, and its greatest width is fifty-six inches. Its entrance would seriously inconvenience a stout person trying to pass through it. Twenty-nine inches from wall to wall is all the room that can be spared in this part of the queer street. Yarmouth is a quaint old town containing many streets like Kitty Witches' row. They are called rows and are more picturesque than convenient. A hundred and forty-seven of these narrow streets of a length of over seven miles in all are to be found in the town.—Dundee Advertiser.

A Costly Card.
The costliest Christmas card ever made was executed to the order of the gaeikwar of Baroda, an Indian potentate, who wished to present it to a European lady. It was a piece of ivory 12 by 10 inches, and more than forty elephants were sacrificed before a perfect piece could be obtained. Four ivory carvers worked incessantly for six months engraving 10,000 scenes upon it, and the eyesight of all four was affected and one went totally blind shortly afterward. Diamonds surrounded its edge.

Ice as an Explosive.
Quarrymen in very cold districts sometimes economize in dynamite by using water instead. Drilling several holes in a large block of granite, they pour in water, stop up the hole securely and leave it for a couple of days. The water freezes and in the process expands so much that it bursts the stone asunder. From this fact may be gathered some idea of the enormous forces contained in nature.

Eskimo Wrestling.
Next to gambling the Eskimo men like to wrestle. The usual way of doing this is a test rather of strength than skill. The wrestler sits down on the floor or in any convenient place side by side and facing in opposite directions, say with right elbows touching. Then they lock arms, and each strives to straighten out the other's arm.

Conscription in Rome.
In the earliest period of Roman military history all able-bodied citizens under the king as commander in chief were compelled to serve in the army in time of war. It was under Servius Tullius, sixth king of Rome, that the first real organization took place. The army was recruited by means of tribal levies, and each tribe was called upon to furnish an equal number of men.

Pinched on the House.

Jack—I just saw your wife, old man. She was simply stunning. By the way, you're looking rather miserable yourself. What's up?
Tom—Don't get enough nourishment, that's all. You see, I arranged with my wife a month ago to give her a certain amount each week, out of which she was to pay household expenses and buy her clothes.
