TREATMENT BY FORMAL-DEHYDE FOR OAT SMUT

No work done by the farmer pays better than the short time necessary to treat oat seed for smut. Smut on oats is not due to the time of sowing or to the type of ground but is entirely due to the presence of the spore of the oat smut under the shuck of the oat kernel.

When oats are in blossom the shuck is open. Smut spores flying about get under the shuck and lie there until the oats are put in the ground. If the weather is rainy at oat-blossom time the smut spores are carried to the ground and so many do not find lodgement within the oat kernel. The year following a wet spell at oat-blossom time will have less smut. No one can tell in the Spring whether his seed oats contain smut. Treating seed oats to prevent smut is insurance against the pest. The farmer insures his buildings although he does not expect that they will burn. The chances of a loss from smut with untreated oats are heavy, therefore the greater need of insuring by treatment of seed. The following problem is a fair statement of the probable gain from insuring against smut.

Average loss per acre by smut 5 bu.
 Average loss per acre with seed treated 12.5 bu.
 Net loss per acre without treatment 4.15 bu.
 192 bu. at 50¢ per bu. $96.00
 Net loss per 40 acres 192 bu.
 Cost of treatment of seed
 Formalin for 80 bu. $.80
 Labor $ 5.00
 Total $ 5.80
 Net gain on 40 acre crop $90.20

The New York State School of Agriculture at Alfred University suggests the following method of treatment: Place number of bushels of seed required in pile on barn floor. Use formalin at the rate of 1 pint to 50 gallons of water. Sprinkle with ordinary sprinkling pot, 1 gallon of solution to every bushel of oats; one man sprinkling and another shoveling over the pile. Cover pile with blankets and let it remain covered over night. Next day spread out to dry. Do not put in infected bin or sacks. Sow it at once, or dry and keep as long as desired.
