THE NAVY AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

Washington, D. C., May 22.—The diplomatic situation involving the relations of the United States with Germany has overshadowed every other matter in Washington during the past week. One effect of the present situation is very noticeable here. That is the very rapid spread of the feeling that the Nation must have a larger and more effective navy. The question of providing a more comprehensive plan of naval development is already looked upon as certain to come in for thorough discussion and also for action when the Sixty-fourth Congress assembles. It is not believed that the objection of lack of revenue will again be allowed to stand in the way of a more vigorous naval policy. It is pointed out that a country with the wealth and resources of the United States will have no difficulty in providing for adequate sea protection once the public sees the need of it. A government official called attention this week, for example, to the fact that the tariff revenue from sugar, which is scheduled to be dropped next May, amounts to $50,000,000 a year and in the past twenty years has brought a billion dollars into the Treasury. By retaining this revenue duty the country would be able to construct every year four or five of the latest type of battleships besides seven or eight scout cruisers and twenty submarines. Such a program, he shows, would soon make the American navy equal to the best in the world. Whether or not this exact plan is adopted, it seems certain from the present temper of the public as reflected here in Washington that more serious attention than heretofore will be paid to developing the naval arm of the national defence.

Young Man Go North

Horace Greeley advocated the West, and a whole lot of people believed with him. Now the West stands up alone without any help, and a good many of its people are migrating to different parts. While one hears a lot about the great countries to the South, yet the statistics do not prove much in their favor. For instance Porto Rico shows a decrease in its aggregate commerce of more than nine million dollars for the year 1914. With Alaska there was an increase of four million dollars. Uncle Sam is to build a railroad and open the natural resources of Alaska for the benefit of her people, and government people say there will be great opportunities in our northern possessions when things "get to moving."

The Bank Fued

The row between the United States treasury officials and the Riggs National Bank has been the big thing of interest in Washington during the week. The two institutions are located directly opposite one another, and the evidence shows that for years there was absolute harmony. Possibly the nearness of the two establishments brought about the use of the Riggs as "the back door to Wall Street." All went well for years until the hot-headed Williams dropped into office at the treasury and began calling the Riggs people "names." Then the fur began to fly, and now the whole country wonders where the row will end.

The School House of the World
Dr. P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education at Washington, predicts that the nations of the world will turn to American educational institutions after the war. He says that "this war will make it necessary for the United States to take the lead in the commerce, civilization and education of the world." Dr. Claxton says that one of the drawbacks being fastened upon this country is the so-called "exclusive society," and he advises the young people of the United States to use their influence in improving the society they are in and to work to improve poorer homes.

Not much "Moral Uplift" in This

The star performers in the drama being conducted under the auspices of the Commission on Industrial Relations, appears to be "Mother Jones" and John D. Rockefeller, Junior. When the hearings were being held in New York, young Mr. Rockefeller proposed a junket for Mrs. Jones and himself to the Colorado coal fields, and the "old girl" enthusiastically accepted. It is probable that the Rockefeller invitation was taken a little too seriously, as there is no reason to suppose that the fortunate young millionaire has any longing for the company of the old woman who has figured so prominently in the Colorado coal strike.

Young Mr. Rockefeller "cooled his heels" for two days in Washington while ministers of the gospel, and others of his critics, gave their testimony before the Commission. Dr. Gaddes, a Colorado minister, told the Commission that twenty-five years ago four-fifths of the miners spoke the English language, while today four-fifth of the Rockefeller employees speak only in foreign tongues. Dr. Gaddes was formerly in charge of the sociological work for the mining company, and he related how the company had controlled politics, harbored and encouraged saloons, and otherwise negotiated a policy that lowered standards of citizenship.

Worthy Sons of Great Sires

John D. Rockefeller, Junior, is one of the active men of to-day. He and J. Pierpont Morgan, have demonstrated that rich men's sons are sometimes better financiers than their "daddies." They stand out prominently in contrast to sons of other rich men, who are so plentiful in Washington and the East, whose time is given up to the pursuit of frivolous pleasures. While some of the worthless scions of great families are travelling from one fashionable resort to another, and attain their prominence because of the horses they exhibit at the annual events young Rockefeller and Morgan have been attending to the great interests that came to them from their fathers.

Looking Beyond the Length of the Nose

The Colorado coal strike is largely a result of pig-headedness. A lot of hysterical individuals like "Mother Jones" have been exploited as champions of the human race, and about all the radical anarchists and professional labor leaders in the country have rushed to Colorado to join in the defence of the down-trodden miners. They have raised so many unreasonable points that the self-respecting employers have refused to comply with the demands that have reached them. Young Mr. Rockefeller and his associates have plainly indicated that they will not yield, and they maintain their position as a matter of principle and sound business. But the testimony of Dr. Gaddes, and some of the others, points out the difficulties of the situation and clearly shows that the miners and the employers are dealing with the situation entirely from the present-day aspect. If this really admirable young Mr. Rockefeller could see beyond the length of his proboscis he would likely try to remedy and change a condition that has made the English language so rare a commodity among his workmen. And if the Moyers, Haywoods, and their kind, were half as sensible as they are noisy, they would look for something more than a babble of triumph in Colorado.

Will This Commission Score?

The Commission on Industrial Relations is getting together a great story, and its work ought to be the basis for legislation that will improve conditions between employers and employees. But the hope of what "ought to be" may never realize anything of a material nature. In witness thereof we can all recall the "money trust investigation," "the steel investigation," and many other notable inquiries conducted on behalf of the federal government. The "steel trust investigation" brought out, among other things, the relations between labor and capital, just as the present Commission is attempting to do. In the light of past history the chances are against the present Commission accomplishing real results—though all good citizens are hoping that they may.

EDISON FORESEES HORSELESS FARM

Great Inventor Says Plowing Soon Will Be Done with Electricity

Thomas A. Edison, the inventor and electrical wizard, declares that electricity in farming is one of the country's coming developments. Something is being done but that branch of the industry is only in its infancy. In many parts of the country, notably Indiana and Illinois, the time is not far distant when intensive farming will be the rule and this will be done with electricity from big central distributing plants with circuits all over the State. "In Illinois," says Mr. Edison "there are now some 400 farm towns using electricity. All ought to have it, each with its little substation, if you like, attached to the village grocery or the local drug store. The whole service can be inexpensively handled. They do it in Germany. I noticed that in many sections nearly every farmer had electric poles. Electricity is a feature of the intensive farming which has put that country in the fore-front of agriculture, and made it hard to starve out. Plowing by electricity is an everyday matter.

Price of Electricity Lowered

"The public does not realize that an enormous reduction has gone on in the last few years. Electricity is about the only thing that has gone down in price. The public so far has had the benefit of all the inventions and improvements in that way, but there is a limit to which the rates can be cut, for the capital needed for growth and service must be invited by fair returns. The rate question is not well understood, however, and here again is a chance for simple explanation to the plain people. It is absurd to give a man who pays a monthly bill of only $2 the same rate as one whose bill is $1,000.

"When you come to the electric vehicle for general use and more particularly the electric truck, I see no end to its future. The horse is a very poor motor. Its food is high priced, it is risky property and in the city nobody wants it. It is as sure as death that the electric truck is going to have its day. It takes time to introduce some things. When I helped make the first typewriters it took seven long years to introduce the machine. Then it went everywhere with a rush."

Mr. Edison says he looks forward to the discovery of further chemical reactions which would be used in the generation of electricity, but as to making it direct from coal there was "nothing doing." The inventor's new plant at Orange, N. J. is in active running order and he is as busy as ever.

"I never made anything out of inventions," Mr. Edison says. "The money that keeps all these men busy in the works I got from manufacturing and I have long ceased to expect anything else. I suppose I invent as much as ever, but the pathway to the patent office isn't quite as hot with my footsteps as it used to be."

The News' Classified Ads are watched by investors—for "opportunity news." For people who make their money work for them are accustomed to find, among the classified ads, investment chances—or suggestion of such chances—which mean ultimate profits. Sometimes these investment chances are found in the real estate ads, and sometimes in the business opportunity ads. But to the shrewd reader, they are nearly always to be found under some classification.
