

THE ROAD THAT'S ON THE LEVEL

That is the road to our store. Why? You ask. You know the value of Stein-Bloch Smart and Clothcraft Guaranteed Clothes—that there aren't any better line of clothing to be had at the prices these sell for—that Schaul & Roosa Co. spells clothes distinction and clothes satisfaction.

We are especially proud of our showing of $15.00 and $20.00 Suits—the same guarantee with these as with all others.

Knox Straw Hats are the ones that best dressers seem to take to—not so expensive but that they are in reach of everyone. Straw Hats from $1 up. Every kind of straw and weave is represented.

We have taken great pains to provide for the little fellows. Everything that's needed for him is reasonably priced.

Anything to win seems to be the motto of the Germans indiscriminate killing of non-combatant men, women and children by their soldiery, sinking the ships of neutrals and drowning their passengers and crews, by submarines, dropping bombs on the sleeping population of unfortified towns, fighting with stifling, poisonous gas that produces a lingering and painful death, wantonly burning towns and cities to weaken their enemies, in fact setting aside all laws of civilized warfare, has lost for them the sympathy of the world and shows that their power and bombs should not be increased.

It looks as though wilful piracy is being resorted to in an attempt to manufacture an excuse for sinking the Lusitania. The Germans are a peace loving people, but they are controlled by a military despotism that has deluded them into the belief that they are fighting for the Fatherland. The military men in the middle are doing just what they have been preparing for forty years to do, and if it were not for their work, Germans and Englishmen could live as peacefully as Yankees and Canucks.

A cyclone killed 10 persons and injured 50 others in Wisconsin Saturday. The storm also wrecked a steamer at Winonia.

The Germans claim to have taken several miles of trenches and to have captured many thousands of prisoners in the eastern battlefield.

Mrs. M. D. Webster of Cleveland, Ohio, is in Greenwood, called here by the death of her nephew, Joseph Davis, which was caused by drowning at Canistota Sunday.

Farley Drake, while driving along Main street Tuesday got upset by his wagon colliding with another wagon.

Miss Mary Duffy died at her home west of the village last evening at the age of 66 years. Miss Duffy had been a sufferer from rheumatism for many years—much of the time unable to leave her bed. She had been a school teacher for many years and was the only surviving member of her family.

14,000 men are out on a strike on the Chicago trolley lines. The strike industry is growing with the increase in the cost of labor.

It is a continual strife to make the wage of one division of labor buy more of the earnings of other divisions of labor and when they have all advanced their wages they stand relatively as before striking for as the wages of each are raised the products of the labor of each is raised and their wages buy no more than before. If one class could increase their wage by strike and others be held to the present scale, it would give the striker for that division of labor an advantage, but when all are raised equally and their products raised in price accordingly there is no advantage to any.

Neil O'Hagan of West Greenwood was in town Wednesday.

The late rains are working miracles of the growth of crops.

Lagouri Kernan of Levonia is the guest of friends in Greenwood.

Earl Hale of Hartsville is the guest of his parents of the Greenwood Hotel.

SOME REFLECTIONS ABOUT SECONDARY EDUCATION

By Rev. V. L. Eggleston

The public high school is organized and maintained to provide secondary education. It occupies the central position in our educational system, between the elementary school below and the university beyond. It assimilates the precious fruits of the higher education and disseminates them through the lower retention on the one hand, and on the other, it opens the way for every competent pupil from the lower to the higher. On its continued existence and progressive efficiency depends the wholesome and vital interchange between the elementary and formative and the uplifting and directive energies of our civilization.

Aim of Secondary Education

Secondary education aims to train for useful and happy living. To secure this end it must, first of all, give something of that harmonious and symmetrical development of the individual which we characterize as general welfare. The power to see clear and think straight, to adjust the mind to the realities of the world, to reach true conclusions from carefully discriminated data, to be strongly developed and refined in sensibilities, and an ethical nature fully aroused; all these are included in general culture. It implies especially the power to comprehend and react upon the resources and problems of civilization.

The Secondary Studies

Language, literature, history, mathematics, physical science and art are the lines of study which past experience has demonstrated to be the most effective means to this end. It follows that these subjects must hold places of honor in the high school curriculum. Adequate discussion of these subjects would hardly be appropriate to this occasion, and their established standing in the high schools of the United States, the public schools of England, the lycées of France and the gymnasia of Germany imposes upon any assailant of them such a burden of proof as few men of discretion would care to assume.

The Classics

Never has the study of the classics been more firmly entrenched in American secondary education than it is now. The course which includes the classics is everywhere held to be the strongest course, the course which will most surely fit the student to adjust his mind to the realities of life and give him the power to comprehend and react upon the resources and the problems of civilization. The place of Greek in the high school course rests not alone on prescription and tradition. No study trains in a higher degree the power of independent thought and its exact expression. It will continue to educate the purest minds so long as studies are a delight and an honor.

English

The mother tongue rightly holds the first place in the language course in the elementary and secondary school. The ability to express clearly, accurately and elegantly, if need be, the thoughts we have are intimately related to our modes of thinking, that whatever strengthens the mind, tends to strengthen power of expression. But within recent years the priceless heritage, our own English literature, has been opened to the high school student. He reads Burke's stately periods, gains insight into the matchless rhetoric of De Quincy, feels the power of Milton's divine harmonies and hears something of the surge and thunder on the shore of Shakespeare's oceanic genius.

French and German

The curricula of the best type of high schools give opportunities, too, for the study of the languages and literature of France and Germany. These languages afford a discipline second in value only to that of the study of the classics and their literature, which include so large a share of the best thinking of modern times, are of transcendent interest and importance. On similar grounds a place may be made for Spanish, a noble tongue with a splendid literature; the study of which is now demanded by the extension of our trade with the Spanish-speaking people south of us and most probably by the extension of our domain.

Mathematics

Happily the value and importance of mathematics in secondary education are not questioned, so far as I know, from any direction. Algebra, geometry, trigonometry and such a review of arithmetic as will give the student insight into arithmetic operations as applications of generalizations derived from the higher mathematics are the traditional and approved subjects covered in this department. The mathematics of the high school rightly taught realizes the threefold aim of shaping the mind to be what Huxley calls a clear, cold logic engine, fitting the pupil to divide and conquer in the problems of his practical vocation and to gain access to the lofty heights of the higher mathematics and the exact physical sciences.

Physical Science

The American high school is giving an over-large place to the physical sciences. The transforming power of science in our time is a commonplace, but not even yet, in the beginning of the twentieth century has science been accorded its rightful place in secondary education. The achievements of physical science have been the crowning glory and blessing of the past century. Its inventions and discoveries have inaugurated a new era in human civilization. Such scientific knowledge and master of scientific methods as fit the student to comprehend and react upon the resources of our civilization belong, in their element at least, by the highest right to our secondary education. The culture derived from the study of the sciences is somewhat different from, but it is not inferior in its disciplinary value to that derived from the study of the humanities. In these phenomena of nature appears as facts to be tested and proved. The student handles, observes, infers, co-ordinates, generalizes, begins trains of reasoning and comparison that may lead to the discovery and establishment of nature's laws. The mind is alert, is at work in the highest range of its activity. The study of nature under right methods quickens the senses, intensifies perception and trains the powers of comparison, judgment and generalization. Physics, chemistry, physiology and the biological sciences belong to the curriculum of the best type of the high school; not only by right of the transcendent value of the information they give but still more by their fulfillment of the requirements of the culture demanded by modern life.

History

The right of history to a place in the high school course is no longer a matter of question. The intrinsic interest of the subject and its obvious relation to the duties of citizenship require that it extend throughout the course. The methods followed and the subjects selected from the vast field of historical knowledge are now well established. As the student learns the outlines of American history in the elementary grades, the history of England followed by that of the great nations and periods that have made civilization and crowned by an intensive study of our own country and its institutions is undertaken in the high school. Closely associated with this study of history is the study of government in its various historical forms and a close study of our own government. The student is trained to investigate the facts to consult authorities, to compare statements and to form his own conclusions. How important such training for good citizenship where the student gains growing insight into his relations to community, state and nation and the world.

Chips

The future offers its best gifts to the man with a thorough education.

Money spent for an education is an investment in yourself. The way you use your time is evidence of the estimate you put upon yourself.

Will it pay to go to college? The boy is the best answer to that question.

Some boys go to college, others are sent. It makes all the difference in the world.

A college is an organized opportunity. A wise student will make the most of it.

Men have become great without a college education. Others have become great in spite of the colleges from which they graduated. But the fact remains that a thorough college education prepares a man to put more into life, and to get more out of it than is possible without it.

I OWE MY LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

They Did Me More Good Than All Other Treatments Combined

Mrs. H. S. WILLIAMS

PALMERSTON, ONT., June 20th, 1914. "I really believe that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives'. Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctors' bills. I was so sick and weak that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. I got a box of 'Fruit-a-tives' your famous medicine made from fruit juices and they completely relieved me. To-day, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked me the reason. I replied, 'I am taking Fruit-a-tives'. He said, 'Well, 'Fruit-a-tives' are making you look if you were more than I am.' I got a box of 'Fruit-a-tives' your famous medicine made from fruit juices and they completely relieved me.
