FARM BOUGHT FOR VALUE OF WOOD LOT

Syracuse College Taking Stock Of Forest Resources in Hill Counties of State

Repeated statements made to The College of Forestry at Syracuse in letters and through conversations during past few years has led it to believe that there is a much larger area of forest land in some of the hill counties of the southern part of the state than is ordinarily appreciated by the people of the state. Not until the County Farm Bureaus in some of the southern hill counties began a careful study of farm conditions was it appreciated fully that large parts of some of the hill counties of southern New York are not being farmed profitably and that eventually much of some of the counties must be in forest if the section is to bear its proper support of the Commonwealth. The agent in charge of the Farm Bureau of Chemung County stated last year that a considerable part of the land in Chemung County is too hilly to till to the best advantage. He stated further that every fourth or fifth farmer in the hilly region of the county is receiving nothing but a house to live in and a few farm products for the family for his labor and less than 5% interest on his investment. These statements seem to justify the College in believing what it has been hearing so often since its organization—that is, that many New York farms and especially those in the hill country in the southern part of the state can be bought for the value of the wood lot and that a growing woodlot will often double the sale value of many New York farms.

That the College of Forestry at Syracuse may have absolutely definite information as to woodlot values and as to the proportionate amount of forest land, especially in the southern counties of the state which are known to contain a good deal of forest land, it is carrying on during the present Summer in the counties of Broome, Chenango, Delaware and Otsego a study of forest resources and lumber market conditions which it began in 1912 in the counties of St. Lawrence, Ontario, Madison and Greene where its several forest stations are located. Four of the older students of the College, under the direction of Professor R. T. Green of the Extension Service of the College, are working on bicycles through each township in the four hill counties referred to above. Every woodlot of 10 acres or over is mapped onto Geological Survey maps of the counties. An estimate of the amount of timber standing in the woodlot is made and the owner, if accessible, is asked about the marketing of his woodlot, what prices received, etc. The results of the Summer's work will be published for the purpose of showing the actual conditions existing to-day and comparisons and suggestions will be made as to how woodlots can be marketed most effectively. Proper marketing of the woodlots of the state is the solution of the problem of making these woodlots profitable to their owners. The continuation of this forest survey of the state from year to year will eventually give the people of the state very comprehensive and exact information as to the forest resources of New York. Without such a careful stocktaking it is difficult to plan for future effective development and use of the forest lands of the state.

In view of the increasing annual lumber bill of the State of New York which now amounts to over $100,000,000 as shown by "Woodusing Industries Bulletin" published by the College and because nearly two-thirds of this bill is paid outside of the State, and in view of common knowledge of the steady increase in price of forest products, it seems to The College of Forestry time that a great industrial and agricultural State like New York should no longer depend upon the forests of the south and west but should utilize in an effective way the vast areas of forest lands within its own borders.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FARM BUREAU ASSOCIATION

The annual meeting of the Legany County Farm Bureau Association was held at the Thursday, June 10th. There was a good attendance. The Secretary and Treasurer read reports. The Bureau is in the best condition financially that has been in since its organization. The manager read a report which is printed in a column.
