The Program of A Townsman

As the program cannot be higher than the faiths we have, deeper than our sympathies, broader than our interests, more far-reaching than our trail's goal, it will be a townsman's first business to locate himself in the universe.

There is Some Kind of God

I think God is just, kind, good and friendly beyond our measuring. If I shall be a gentleman so must I, also, likewise be somewhat of his nature. I have that impression. Some slight experience has reacted favorably on my own consciousness. The folks to whom I have tried to be just, good and friendly went forward blither.

The Other People and Myself

I believe in myself—have a very vast pride and deep valuation. I am too big to live a jungle-life. I am the dreamer of a life-dream that lifts beyond the stars. Other people must be as I—with rights, privileges, liberties, that, as mine were given to me, must be within my interest. The jungle-creeper denies this. But we are the children of God.

We are not Hermits

A townsman has relations. He owes his town his best, every person his best. Only the parasite acknowledges no obligation. The leech! But a related being fulfills his responsibilities, and needs a goad. Lives gladly.

A Community Ideal

Every man ought to have a chance to work with wages enough to be beyond the fear of poverty, ought to live in a good house with pleasant surroundings, ought to have healthful amusements, clean streets, friendly folks for neighbors, and churches dedicated to light. We ought to believe in the job we have, and in the other man's job. We should carry the bag of jeweled praise gifts in front and the bag of criticism behind—beyond reach.

Mixing in Other People's Business

We should be interested in other people, in their plans, ambitions, hopes, goals, in their homes, in their children. If we have found something worth while we should blaze the trail thereto. It may be some discovery, invention, art, craft, pleasure, joy, knowledge, culture, religion. The townsman shares.

The Big Thing In Life

The townsman recognizes that friendship is the biggest asset in life, the wolf and vulture to the contrary. He knows that banks, stores, factories, farms cannot put a town on the map, friendship, cooperation will. Friendship is the distinguishing mark of a big man. Our friendship quality locates us in the universe. It is the only proof of our immortality. God shouldn't welcome an unfriendly soul: He couldn't keep from running out to meet a friendly soul.
