MAKING PUNS UPON NAMES.

A Peculiar Brand of Humor That Was Once Quite Popular.

In the days of Theodore Hook and his merry friends jokes upon proper names were quite the thing, and while the auditors grinned the victim bore the infliction with as much dignity as he could summon up. As a specimen of Hookian wit of this kind the following may serve: "A humorist of this epoch (I am not quite sure whether it was the sprightly Theodore himself), invited to the house of a Mr. Pepper, greeted his host with the words, 'How happy you must be, Mr. Pepper, to see your friends all mustered.'" A better instance, perhaps, is Hook's impromptu when a tax collector called Winter was seen to be at the door: Here comes Mr. Winter, collector of taxes. I advise you to pay him whatever he asks. You had much better pay him without any flummery. Though Winter's his name, his proceedings are summary.

The most fearsome and complete pun of this kind was made by an examiner who had to tell a certain undergraduate the result of his viva voce. The undergraduate's name was Field Flowers Goe, and he subsequently attained some eminence in the church. The verdict was, "The Field is plowed, the Flowers are plucked, and you, sir, can Goe!"

There is a variety of the pun upon a name, however, that one is almost inclined to forgive or at least to regard with a certain leniency. It is when some familiar quotation is given an apt twist which brings in the cognomen of the victim. One of the best of this kind is attributed to Sir William Harcourt. Listening to a long descended baronet named Knightley descending on the antiquity of his family, the politician was heard to misquote a well known hymn as follows:

And Knightley to the listening earth Recounts the story of his birth. From the United States comes the story of an unwilling auditor of Senator Lodge, who, as the senatorial eloquence showed no signs of ceasing, muttered to his neighbor, "Oh, for a Lodge in some vast wilderness!"

James Payn, the novelist and editor, was notoriously averse to physical exercise. A gentle stroll from the Cornhill offices in Waterloo place to the Reform club was the limit of his pedestrianism. So it was not strange that he showed signs of acute discomfort on a country ramble. As the party climbed a steep acclivity in the course of the walk one of them, noticing the novelist's distress, whispered to another, "The labor we delight in physics Payn."—New York Sun.

MOUNT VERNON, THE HOME OF WASHINGTON

By J. E. Jones
A pretty little story of visits to Mount Vernon on the Potomac—"Impressions and sentiments like yours and mine," explain the author to those who have seen our country's greatest shrine—Bound in colonial blue and buff with hand illuminated cover design and George Washington's colonial ribbon book mark; profusely illustrated with handsome half-tones and pen drawings, it is a dainty and invaluable reminder that will instantly appeal to every person who has been to Mount Vernon, while to those who have not had that good fortune this clever, happy story of our beloved George and Martha gives a clearer view and understanding of their colonial home, which is to-day the pride of Virginia and the Nation.

As a souvenir or gift book, for young or old, there is nothing to approach the elegance of this little volume, and it will make one feel more like a patriotic American to possess it.
