AUDITORIUM, SATURDAY EVENING

Wallace Eddinger in "A Gentleman of Leisure"

This comedy, which enjoyed extraordinary success when originally produced on Broadway, makes one of the most unique and amusing films ever produced. The hero is a young New York society man who makes a bet that he can rob a house and get away without being caught by the police. Shortly after making this wager, he overpowers a professional burglar in his own house, and, instead of giving the man up, decides to use him in winning the bet. However, the house that he attempts to rob is the home of the Deputy Police Commissioner, with whose daughter he is in love.

The succeeding complications, which arise out of this altogether original situation, are due to the Commissioner's willingness to accept graft and the professional burglar's inability to restrain himself when tempted to steal a valuable necklace. The final result is a happy conclusion to the very troubled love-story. This is undoubtedly one of the most humorous stories ever obtained for photodramatization, and the results are said to establish a new precedent in comedy photodrama work.

GRADING AND MARKETING POTATOES

During the season just passed, the potato crop of New York State received a serious setback on account of a general outbreak of the late blight disease which resulted in much loss from rot in the field. Potato growers in nearly all sections of our state as well as in most of the other leading potato states of the Union have been affected, except in rare instances where exceptionally thorough spraying was done.

Owing to the fact that late blight rot operates rapidly under moist and temperate storage conditions, the Cornell agricultural authorities say that those who attempt to hold all or part of their crop for Spring or mid-Winter prices will likely find a part of it rotting in storage. This makes careful handling to avoid bruising, moderately dry conditions, and low storage temperatures almost a necessity. Early sales at harvest time are to be recommended, when prices warrant, and when there is no danger of large consignments rotting on the buyers' hands. Even though tubers may go into storage in an apparently healthy condition, this is no proof that the fungus spores of late blight which are likely to come in contact with the tubers at digging time, will not produce rapid rotting in storage. Growers harvesting blighted fields may do to sell early in small quantities so that the product will be consumed in a relatively short time with little or no loss to either the farmer or the consumer.

Grading is Important

Owing to the low prices which farmers received for their potato crop during the past season, and the present poor condition of the crop, this Fall is a particularly opportune time for careful sorting and grading. By sorting out tubers showing evidence of blight at digging time, much further infection by contact may be avoided. By grading the tubers into standard grades and discarding or feeding the culls, the consumer will get a better product which ought to result in a stimulated sale. There are numerous potato sorters now on the market which make two or three grades of market potatoes besides culls. These machines are not expensive and may be used in the field at the time of picking up the crop, making it possible to haul direct from the field to market. The standard first grade established by an especially appointed commission at Chicago and recognized by most of
