MOBILIZING WOMEN OF THE COUNTRY

Resources of the Nation Will Not Be Utilized Until Women Are Enfranchised.

An Editorial For Patriots.
The political campaigns of the two or three national parties are going to be waged during the next few months mainly upon the question of preparedness. This is the political question of the hour. Suffrage organizations, too, have repeatedly been urged to take a stand on this question. They have been asked to parade for preparedness and to work for it.

But as a suffrage organization they cannot do either. Their party has only one plank in its platform, and that is votes for women. Individually suffragists divide on this question, as do all other men and women. But suffragists as a party do believe in a preparedness which will be effective in maintaining the safety of these United States. Europe is showing the world that no country can defend itself without the help of its women. At present warfare is not carried on in trenches only. The work of women's brains and hands has been found necessary in Europe to provide food, to make munitions, to mine coal, to till fields, to care for the wounded.

Women Want to Serve Their Country.

Every suffragist knows that the women of America are just as willing as the women of Europe to serve their country. But they believe that "true patriotism for women as well as for men means not only love of country, but a high sense of responsibility to the nation."

A suffrage leader which was widely circulated on the streets of New York city on the day of the preparedness parade calls attention to the fact that patriotism "should be highest under a democratic form of government like ours, where responsibility rests with the voters. True preparedness means the development of all a country's resources. Women are a part of these resources. One-half the people of the United States are women. So long as women are denied the vote the highest sense of responsibility in one-half the people will not be developed and one-half the human resources of the country will not be fully utilized. The lessons of the war show that now is the time to make women equally responsible with men for upholding the honor and glory of the stars and stripes.

Men of America, give your women the ballot that whatever befalls this land in war or peace its adult citizens may work together for the country's welfare.

METHODISTS FAVOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

General Conference of Church Indorses the Movement.

It was with no grudging voice that the Methodists indorsed woman suffrage at their general conference now in session at Saratoga Springs. The suffrage leader of Saratoga county writes: "You would certainly have enjoyed the enthusiasm with which the suffrage resolution was passed this morning by the conference. Mr. Henry Wade Rogers introduced the resolution, to which he had secured the signatures of men like ex-Governor Hanley, ex-Governor Wallace, Chancellor Day, etc."
Mr. Rogers, who is chairman of the judiciary committee of the conference, made a forceful speech, and the delegates could hardly wait for him to finish before voting.
"Said the Brooklyn Eagle of May 24: "It is not a matter of surprise that the Methodist general conference at Saratoga should vote for woman suffrage. A conference which has women among its delegates, representing a church in which women vote for church officers, could not logically take any other grounds. Since that day the accretions to the suffrage cause have been the normal result of the more active life of women and of the greater increase of women in industry, where they compete with men on even terms in everything except the right to vote. The minority of six in the Saratoga conference shows that in one of the great religious denominations the opposition has become merely a shell." The minority was actually only one.

"Dogs and Mules and Dead Men Vote." From West Virginia, where woman suffrage will be voted on next November, comes the report that the supreme court of the state is convinced that many "mules, dogs and dead persons are registered as voters and many fictitious names are on the registry list." If women are refused the ballot next fall in this state, where such elections have been possible, how will southern gentlemen like it if they have to acknowledge that the vote was denied to living women, their own wives and daughters, by the decision of "mules, dogs and dead men?"

WHY SMART & CO. FAILED

By Rev. V. L. Eggleston

It was a surprise to the whole town. They had certainly been doing a good business and as for their credit it was unlimited. When Tom Smart could go out on the street any day and borrow a thousand dollars, and had done it. He was a native of the county and had come to live in the village at his uncle's when a mere boy and everybody knew him. At the high school he took the first prize in elocution and his graduation essay was published in the local paper and when he went into Barnes' dry goods store as a clerk he nearly doubled the business for he was about the brightest, smartest young fellow in town and there wasn't a girl rich or poor that wouldn't have caught herself lucky to have captured him. And Tom deserved his popularity too for he was a young man of good principles and steady habits and when he and a fellow clerk left the old store and set up for themselves in the new block on the corner they did a thriving business from the very start, but now after ten years as good a village trade as any young man could ask for the popular store is suddenly closed, the sheriff takes possession and Smart & Co., are gazetted as bankrupts. Two of the proudest and most fashionable families of the village are prostrated, the poor ladies almost killed by the shock. How did all this happen? What ruined the firm of Smart & Co.?

It is a short story and one that has been told a thousand times with only a change of minor details. When Thomas Smart and his associate, Charles E. Abbott, set up in business for themselves they had not yet acquired and commenced living accordingly. Both married, one just before and the other soon after their new venture, and both set up housekeeping on a grand scale. Smart's wife brought him a very expensive piece of property, namely an elegant house completely furnished, the gift of her father. Abbott married a worthy poor girl, the sweetheart of his school days. Both men married well except that both wives were fond of display and inclined to a life of genteel indolence. Were not their husbands rich or getting rich, which was all the same, and was not the family credit good for anything they needed or fancied? And one luxury or indulgence always begets another, so expenses went on increasing. Abbott's modest dwelling was soon exchanged for another larger than he could buy, and for which he paid a heavy rental. Everything was done to ape the rich and nothing with an eye to economy. Expenses ate up the profits of the business, and ate into the credit of the firm. Debts accumulated on every hand. One note was paid by getting another discounted at heavy rates, and so things went on until the inevitable end was reached.

Hawkins & Bro., their rivals in the same line of trade, had pursued quite a different course. With a larger capital they had been more economical. One of the brothers lived over the store and his wife was the cashier of the business, while the other lived with their parents in the old-fashioned style that had always characterized the family, and so the business grew and flourished and when Smart & Co. went under, Hawkins & Bro. bought the whole stock at forty cents on the dollar for ready cash and sold out at "great bargains," making a handsome thing by the operation. They were the only firm in town who stood ready to do this, for they made it a point to keep a few thousand dollars in the bank or within easy call just for the purpose of taking advantage of the market. Their credit was all, but they seldom used it. They bought for cash and the wholesale trade was always after them with the best goods and handsome discounts. In this way they bought their goods lower than Smart & Co. had done during the last three or four years of their career, that is while their credit was being strained.

After the failure Smart went on the road as a salesman for a New York firm that he had dealt with and to which he honorably paid a heavy debt out of his earnings. Abbott picked up, too, and was soon on his feet again and making money which he and his family had learned how to keep. Mrs. Abbott, who knew nothing about how things were going had been perfectly innocent about the failure. "Why I thought my husband was rich," she said. "He never told me we were living beyond our means." He had been only too good a husband and whatever his darling Susie wanted must be provided, if not with cash, then with credit. He never blamed her for the failure, nor had he any right to.

It is easy to sum up why Smart & Co. failed and why Hawkins & Bro. became the leading firm in the town. One house spent money before it was earned and the other earned before spending.
