TRAVIS OUT FOR A RENOMINATION

As Senator He Was Leading Hughes Supporter.

FOUGHT HIS WAY TO TOP

Since Charles E. Hughes was nominated President at the Republican Convention held in Chicago last June a large number of men throughout the State of New York, and in fact in the West, have been presenting their claims entitling them to the honor of being called the "first Hughes men."

Many of them have had exaggerated notions in this respect and have gone far back into history for the purpose of showing they were among the first in the land who espoused the cause of the Presidential candidate. Incidents were recalled as to how they first suggested Mr. Hughes for some particular office and when they modestly refrained from bringing to the public eye until after the nomination was made in Chicago.

Serving With Distinction.

While these claims of the alleged original Hughes men were being sent broadcast by those anxious to get on the front seat of the band wagon a certain man in Kings County remained quiet and looked on while the hosts clamored for the honor which still appears to be in dispute. He did not declare he was the original Hughes man, but justly stated he was among the original Hughes men. This person is none other than State Comptroller Eugene M. Travis, whom the Republicans are going to renominate at the primaries in September for the office which he is now filling with distinction and credit to the state.

Those familiar with political affairs do not have to look back to see where Travis figured among the original Hughes men. The latter had conducted one of the most sensational insurance investigations in the state. His courage in the performance of his work and the fidelity to the public's cause made him a conspicuous figure almost overnight. It was as a result of his insurance probing that the Republicans in a critical year made Hughes their candidate for Governor. He was elected as everyone knows and went to Albany almost unknown in the Legislative halls.

It was here that Governor Hughes became aware of the fact that there was an independent Senator in Brooklyn by the name of Eugene M. Travis. To carry on the work which he had in mind the Governor needed just the sort of a man like the present Comptroller. He took him into his confidence, explained what he intended to accomplish and from that day Hughes never had a more loyal supporter than the Brooklyn Senator. Travis approved of all the Hughes reforms. He was with the Governor heart and soul from the start and voted for every measure he advocated.

Won Big Brooklyn Fights.

The alliance made with Governor Hughes was not altogether pleasing with the powers in control of the Republican Party in Kings County. Travis was marked for defeat for following the cause Hughes espoused. The late Timothy L. Woodruff was the leader at that time. He was not pleased with Travis for what he had done. Neither was the late George H. Roberts, the leader of the Assembly District in which Travis lived. Woodruff and Roberts started a reprisal. They went after the scalp of the Senator. Undaunted by such a strong combination Travis decided to make a personal fight against Roberts' leadership. To the surprise of the politicians he defeated the leader and was also re-elected to the Senate.

Travis a Hughes Supporter.

During the remaining years Hughes was in the Governor's chair Travis continued to support him in all his moves. His work was very helpful to the Governor who never forgot the support he received. For doing this Travis was at the time described as a Hughes man. The name clung to him for years and when the former Governor was nominated for the Presidency Brooklyn Republicans again began to speak of the Comptroller as the Hughes man. So it appears from this brief record of what is well-known history, Travis is entitled to the rank of one of the "Original Hughes Men."

Cut Down Expenses.

That his views on how a public office should be run have not changed since he was in the senate are shown by Travis' record of achievements made by Travis in the State Comptroller's office. He has cut down the running expenses of his department more than $138,000 this year and has adopted reforms which have put the various branches of the administration on a more scientific basis. He is now a candidate for a renomination and is confident the Republicans of the state will keep him in his present place at least for two more years.

Deputy Comptroller William Boardman is supervising the work of distributing the petitions. They have been placed in the hands of every Republican County Chairman in the state.
