She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Frank Emery, of Andover; Mrs. Ida Sims, of Greenwood; and Mrs. Sheridan Austin, of Rexville; two sons, Edwin Moore, of Hornell; and Harry Moore, of Canisteo; and one sister, Mrs. Lydia Stearn, of Jamestown.

The funeral services were held at her late home Tuesday afternoon, at one o'clock, by Rev. Leacock, of Greenwood. Burial was made at Rexville.

THURSDAY EVENING AT THE AUDITORIUM

Love Creates Peace and Harmony Out of Chaos

Finding that the mayoralty campaign is turning against him, Frank Grandell, who heads the "reform" ticket which is trying to smash "Boss" Hoke's political machine, sends his lieutenants to pry into Hoke's private life in the hope of unearthing some damaging scandal. Their curiosity aroused by the mysterious parentage of May Hoke, the adopted daughter of the politician, they corner "Looney Jim," a half-witted fellow, whose devotion to the "Boss" has won through kindness, but he dies before they can extort the secret. Grandell then offers the "Boss" $15,000 for his support and he, determined to crush his enemy, accepts the money and then defies the "reformer" to enforce the bargain. Meanwhile Grandell's wife, whom the "Boss" has for years worshipped from afar, comes to prevent her husband's nefarious intrigue, and while there discovers that he long-lost baby is in reality the adopted daughter of the "Boss."

The approaching wedding of May with young Benton, the mayoralty candidate opposing her father, paves the way for the latter's retirement from the field. All animosity is laid aside and "Boss" Hoke and the Grandells meet in harmony through their mutual interest in May.
