Enrolled Republicans

As a sincere Republican, I take this means of addressing you on the subject of the Republican nomination for United States senator. We have a common purpose in making the Republican party an effective instrument for good government, and by that instrument restoring our government to respect abroad and self respect at home.

Mr. Robert Bacon has filed his petition as a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator. As assistant secretary of state under Mr. Eliul Root—then secretary of state and then ambasador to France—Mr. Bacon has a world vision and experience that would be of inestimable value to this country, should he be permitted to represent our state in the senate.

There are two questions for each enrolled Republican to ask himself: Which of the two candidates for this nomination is best qualified for the position, and the nomination of which would best aid the national ticket? There is no other question involved, and the responsibility rests on the shoulders of the enrolled Republicans. No man can dodge that responsibility by remaining away from the poils or by perfunctority and without the use of his own intelligence following the advice of another.

There is no question of faction, no question of leadership, no question of personal ambition that can consistently be interjected into the problem.

Mr. Bacon believes in the kind of national repersonals which unites of personal ambition that can consistently be interjected into the problem.

Mr. Bacon believes in the kind of national preparedness which unites all the utilities of the nation-military, social, industrial—and that the protection of a jariff is an essential part of such preparedness. He believes in the spirit of service which shall bind each individual to the nation as an entirety. His public life has been dedicated to creating a sentiment throughout the country which will crystallize the thought of the nation into a common aspiration, making it actually what it only nominally is—a real national suit.

sentiment throughout the country which will crystallize the thought of the nation into a common aspiration, making it actually what it only nominally is—a real national spirit.

Mr. Bacon believes that a combination of events has placed this country in a responsible position in the society of nations. He believes that rights and duties are reciprocal. He believes it is the duty of this country to side with the weak when right and not to fear the strong when wrong.

My impression of Mr. Bacon has been gained first hand, and the inspiration for what assistance I may render him in his primary campaign is due to my own belief from contact and observation in him,—in his high purpose, his breadth of views, his unselfishness and his conscientious Americanism.

If the Republican party is to bear its part in the solving of our internal and external questions by placing in positions of high responsibility men who shall speak and art nationally we must call to its standards its best talent.

It is with no thought of disparaging any candidacy, with no thought to interfect other than that element of discussion which is broad, wholesome, normal and humane, that I address myself directly to the enrolled Republican voters.

The Republican party has been most successful when its ideals were high. It has contributed most to-the welfare of the nation when it has squared its conduct to moral and political problems which involved the welfare of the nation as a whole.

With no personal pride of opinion, with no desire to set my judgment stove that of another, I commend to your favorable consideration the candidacy of Mr. Bacon.

I have given my personal allegiance to Mr. Bacon, believing in the ideals he follows and because I am convinced that if he is nominated and elected his career would be a further credit to our party, of advantage to the nation at home and give increased strength to our councilis in international matters.

The world conflict is drawing to a close we all hope. Its fames have reflected the career would be a furt tage to the nation at times and give incleases attended to concern in international matters.

The world conflict is drawing to a close we all hope. Its flames have reflected America to itself. We cannot claim to be a moral nation unless we are moral as individuals. We cannot claim to lead unless we are qualified to lead. We are not qualified to lead unless we are willing to erve.

The ardor for sacrifice, the willingness by service to fill a place of sefulness wherever it may be found, the development of soul and naterial welfare create a common unity of purpose in which alone can a spelled Americanism.

A public service without sentiment, without vision, without a sone purpose, reflecting American life, is as idle in result as a windstorm in a dekert to create vegetation.

Deagnes against invasion, preparedness for every emergency, efficiency in resources, human and material, readiness for service, are the tenets of Mr. Bacon's political faith and should appeal to every intelligent mind.

The responsibility is with you. Sept. 19, primary day, is the opportunity. It is for you to nominate a man qualified, ready, experienced; a Republican beyond faction; an American who stands the acid test.

TOMBS OF THE PHARACHE us Devices Used to Guard Against Grave Robbers. The ingenuity displayed by the

The ingenuity displayed by the ancient Egyptians to prevent robebers from breaking into the Pharsonic graves merits admiration from present day engineers, says a work on the sarcophagus of Khafra, the builder of the second Gizel pyramid, who reigned in Egypt some 5,000 years ago.

mid, who reigned in Egypt some 5,000 years ago. The lid of the red granite sarcophagus was dovetailed with minute precision into the receptacle. To prevent the cover from being drawn back the Egyptian builders bored two, holes in the underside of the lid near the edge, not showing above. These corresponded exactly with two similar holes, less deep than the other two, sunk in the front end of the receptacle. Two copper bolts were then placed in front end of the receptucle. Two copper bolts were then placed in the lid holes, and at the moment the sarcophagus was fully closed the upper and lower holes met and the bolts dropped in position from the upper holes partly into the lower, thus making it impossible to move the lid.

It must have struck the Feventian

It must have struck the Egyptian engineers that grave robbers might get at the body by turning the sar-cophagus upside down, in which case the bolts would glide back into their original position and permit the lid being drawn out. To prevent this they filled the lower holes with wax and made the bolts hot. Upon the lids being placed in position the bolts melted their way into the wax and upon cooling became so firmly fixed that nothing short of complete destruction could open the royal tomb. It must have struck the Egyptian royal tomb.

It must have been a herculean la bor to hew the whole edge away, but that is what grave desecrators did, and the wax can still be seen in the
