 The Wicks investigatig committee report the following in relation to alleged attempts of the dealers to control and keep up the price of feed.
 "The Wicks Investigating Committee will hold no hearings during the next two weeks on account of the State Fair and the fall primaries. During the latter part of the month meeting will be held by the committee in Buffalo Olean and other places in the western part of the State at which time an exhaustive inquiry will be made in conditions which now restrict the sale of feed directly to the consumer. So far the committee has held hearings in twenty counties in central, southern and northern parts of the State.
 In addressing the committee at a recent hearing in Rochester, William E. Dana of Avon, president of the State Dairyman's Association, made the statement that in the past three years he had personal knowledge of seventeen dairies within a radius of five miles in Livingston county, going out of business because they were proving unprofitable through the low price cammanded for the high price charged for feed, labor and other material. The assertion was made that New York State now ranks second in the dairying industry largely through the efforts of feed dealers who are seeking to cripple the farmer by preventing through one method or another the direct selling of feed.
 The war in Europe seems to wage hotter and more pations are being drawn into the struggle. Greece will hardly be able to keep out and Romania and Bulgaria now are the chief grounds of hostilities. It is impossible for the helligerents to satisfactory establish line fences.

 The strike in New York City is assuming alarming proportions. Rioting is the result. The strikers are within their rights in quitting work but when they destroy property and assault others who desire to work they weaken their case before the public who in the end will have to settle the matter.
 The Main Thing.
 A man asked an old negro to what religious denomination he belonged, and the old negro answered: "Bless you, chile, it's this way. There are three roads leading from here to the town—a straight road, a road that goes around in a sort of circle and a road that runs through the woods. When I go to the town with a load of grain the people don't say, 'Uncle Mose, what road did you come by?' but 'Is your wheat good?'"
 The Ancients and Electricity.
 Although little was known of electricity until comparatively modern times, it has been understood since 600 or 700 B. C. that certain substances when rubbed show attraction and repulsion for various light materials. Among these is amber. So in the latter part of the sixteenth century, when electricity was more definitely known, its name was taken from the Greek word for amber.
 Just the Opposite.
 An Irishman got poked in the eye with a stick and took proceedings against the offender.
 Said the magistrate, "Come, now you don't really believe he meant to put your eye out?"
 "Faith, you're right this time," said Pat, "for I believe he tried to put it further in."—London Tit-Bits.
 Codfish Aristocracy.
 The term "codfish aristocracy" is an Americanism and originated in a distinction made by the early Dutch settlers of New York city between the old "Knickerbocker families" and the "down east" merchants who had grown rich in the whale and cod fisheries, the latter being classed as the "codfish aristocracy."

FAMOUS ROMAN ROADS.

Public Highways as They Were During the Reign of the Caesars.

In Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" occurs the following description of the famous Roman roads:

"Under the reign of the Caesars the proper Asia alone contained 500 populous cities, enriched with all the gifts of nature and adorned with all the refinements of art.

"All these cities were connected with each other and with the capital by public highways, which, issuing from the forum of Rome, traversed Italy, pervaded the provinces and were terminated only by the frontiers of the empire. If we carefully trace the distance from the wall of Antoninus to Rome and from thence to Jerusalem it will be found that the great chain of communication, from the northwest to the southeast point of the empire, was drawn out to the length of 4,080 Roman miles.

"The public roads were accurately divided by milestones and ran in a direct line from one city to another, with very little respect for the obstacles either of nature or private property. Mountains were perforated and bold arches thrown over the broadest and most rapid streams. The middle part of the road was raised into a terrace which commanded the adjacent country, consisted of several strata of sand, gravel and cement and was paved with large stones, or in some places near the capital with granite. Such was the solid construction of the Roman highways, whose firmness has not entirely yielded to the effort of fifteen centuries.

"They united the subject of the most distant provinces by an easy and familiar intercourse, but their primary object had been to facilitate the marches of the legions, nor was any country considered as completely subdued till it had been rendered in all its parts pervious to the arms of authority of the conqueror. The advantage of receiving the earliest intelligence and of conveying their orders with celerity induced the emperors to establish throughout their extensive dominions the regular institution of posts.

"Houses were everywhere erected at the distance of only five or six miles, each of them was constantly provided with forty horses, and by the help of these relays it was easy to travel a hundred miles in a day along the Roman roads."

Voice and Art.

"Why in the name of all the saints," asked the master, "have you come back to Bologna—you, the most accomplished singer in the world?"

"Because," said the pupil—"because—because, dear master, I feel that I don't yet really know how to sing."

"My son," was the reply, "that is what none of us shall ever know on this earth. In the next world there may be more time, for when we are young we have the voice, but not the art, and when we are old we have the art, but not the voice."—Exchange.

A Fish Out of Water.

Many people think that fish when taken out of the water die because air has a fatal effect on them. The real reason, however, is that their delicate gill filaments or membranes become dry and stick together, so that no air can pass between them. Thus they lose the power to imbibe necessary oxygen, and the circulation of their blood stops. The painful gasping of a fish out of water is nature's effort to free the passage through the filaments.

Spider Thread Clothes.

Numerous attempts have been made to utilize spider threads for cloth to make clothes, etc. All have been so far doomed to failure—anyhow, as a financial proposition. It is related that Louis XIV. had a dress made from spider's web which was so fragile that he became disgusted with it. The entomologist D'Orbigny had made for himself a pair of trousers from the webs of tropical spiders, which lasted for a long time.
