Potato farmers are busy. Farm help is quite scarce. Potato prices have broken the record. They brought $1.16 direct from the field this week.
The son of Elmer Ilcovy, of Renton Avenue, fell at the school house Monday and fractured his arm near the wrist joint.

The meeting of the Dairymen's League that was called to meet at the Opera House this evening, has been called off as the objects of the proposed meeting have been settled, the milk distributors in New York City having acceded to the demand of the League. The price agreed upon up to November 1st is $2.05; from that date $2.15 up to March 1st.

The distributors have been so thoroughly organized that they controlled the price to the producers to the extent that they had to take about what was offered until the League was established. Now the distributors have signed contracts of which the League had something to say. The prices are $2.05 to November 1st and from that date to Feb. 1st $2.15, and from that date to March $1.95, all for 3 per cent. grade and 3 cents added for each point above that grade. This result shows the farmers the necessity of their thorough organization.

SEABURY TO IMPROVE CONDITIONS FOR FARMERS

Why Is Cost of Living So High and Why Are Farmers Paid So Little? Candidate For Governor Asks. He Promises to Promote the Interests of the Overcharged Consumer and Underpaid Agriculturalist.

Judge Seabury, Democratic candidate for governor, on his speaking tour through the state on Thursday devoted himself to the Farms and Markets problem. He said in part: "I am in favor of foods and markets legislation. If elected Governor, I shall urge that the Department of Foods and Markets be made an effective instrument for the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was originally designed. When I resigned from the Court of Appeals I shall urge that the Department of Foods and Markets be made an effective instrument for the economical distribution of food products, to the end that the farmers of the State and the consumers of food products may be brought into closer touch, to the benefit of both."

Co-operation a Great Benefit.
The high cost of living, the decreasing rural population and the diminishing returns to the farmer require that the distribution of food products should receive thorough study and treatment. The farmers of the State are beginning to realize that co-operation is one of the great facts of this country. In other countries and in other states of this country, farmers have been benefited by co-operating. They will secure better transportation facilities and a scientific system of marketing farm products. They will be facilitated in standardizing and grading their products and obtaining accurate information as to prices and conditions prevailing in local markets. These great purposes can be promoted by thorough food and market legislation. Intelligent action will increase production and improve the quality of farm products. It will secure better prices to the farmer and do much to lower prices to the consumer. The farmer to-day occupies a peculiar position. He is a consumer as well as a producer. When he buys, he buys at retail prices. When he sells his own product, he sells at wholesale prices. No business man could make a profit in doing business upon this basis. I assert that the interests of the farmer and of the consumer are closely allied. The closer together the farmer and the consumer can get, the greater profit the farmer will receive and the lesser will be the price of the products to the consumer. The whole question of the high cost of living is closely related to the attitude of the State toward the farmer. Referring to the conditions prevailing in the Dairy industry: the farmers in many sections are selling their milk at less than the cost of production. The product is being sold to the consumer at very high prices. Agencies and associations of middlemen levy their toll upon both farmer and consumer.

SAMUEL SEABURY.

Starvation Prices For Milk.
It is not right that children on the farm should be underfed because the farmer gets starvation prices for his milk while the children in the cities are underfed because their parents have to pay exorbitant prices for milk. As it is a function of government to build highways and to keep them open so that the farmer may get his products to market, it is properly a function of government to create agencies which will facilitate the getting of the farmer's products to profitable markets, and at the same time enable the consumer to get the necessities of life at fair prices. To solve this problem, I shall enlist the aid of the best minds. A public service commission law with teeth in it would do much to help. Such a commission should compel public service corporations to promote good service at reasonable cost. At present the products of distant quarters of this country have easier access to our markets than do products of this State to near-by city markets.

How to Prevent Abuse.
West of the Mississippi, more than 1,000 miles from New York State, agricultural land sells at several times the acre price which New York farms will bring. Oregon apples are shipped more promptly and with better care than the New York State apple crop. Potatoes from Idaho, wheat from the Northwest and bay from the Central west, with favorable freight rates and speedy hauling, are driving the New York farmer to the wall. Once Rochester was known as the "Flour City," and the Genesee Valley was a granary. Once New York State raised not only its own flour, but its own meat and eggs. The encouragement the railroads have given to the strongly organized trade associations of food dealers, lumber men, flour dealers, meat producers and others prevents the New York farmer from getting the favorable prices to which the high price the consumer pays entitles him and interferes with his free access to the near-by markets of the great cities of his own State. The small shipper is discriminated against. Great organizations of middlemen secure a preference because, with their freight departments and claim agencies, they can secure advantages of which the farmer is unjustly deprived. An adequate public service law would do much to prevent these abuses.

Will Take the Initiative.
The public stand for a constructive programme relating to foods and markets which I have taken seems to have stung the Governor into an expression of sympathy for the condition of the consumer who now pays so much for what he buys, and the condition of the farmer who now gets so little for what he sells. I regret that all that Governor Whitman has done in reference to this subject is to express sympathy and use ambiguous expressions that really mean nothing. In a recent letter he tries to make it appear that he is in favor of the work of the Department of Foods and Markets. He indicates that he favors the performance by this Department of its "proper functions." He does not define what these functions are. The proposed constitution submitted last year and overwhelmingly defeated, attempted to abolish the Department of Foods and Markets. Governor Whitman was the earnest advocate of the adoption of that constitution. I opposed it because it embodied a reactionary programme. He has taken no action to aid either the farmers or the consumers of the State. Actions speak louder than words, especially ambiguous words. One of the most important tasks now is to promote the interests of the farmers and consumers of this State along the lines I have indicated. If elected Governor of this State, I shall take the initiative in this great work.

FULL DINNER PAIL MAN NOW IS FOR WILSON

Baillie, Who Invented Old Republican Slogan, Convinced by President's Record.

The man who invented the slogan, "A Full Dinner Pail," which has long been the campaign cry of the Republican party, to-day wears a Wilson button on his coat lapel.

David G. Baillie of New York and Los Angeles, newspaper man, writer and authority on international affairs, is the man. He is in Portland, Oregon, visiting his son, Hugh Baillie, northwest manager for the United Press.

"Despite his long Republican affiliation, Mr. Baillie is now a Democrat because of progress made by the present administration and warm admiration for President Wilson," says the Oregon "Journal."

"President Wilson, he feels, is far better fitted to be president by education and training than Mr. Hughes."

"Mr. Wilson has a breadth of vision that Mr. Hughes does not possess," he said yesterday morning. "Mr. Hughes is a judge and is handicapped by the years spent on the bench. Taft was a judge, and look what happened to the Republican party under his leadership."

Stationed at Canton, Ohio, for the press, Mr. Baillie, was the first to tell McKinley of his nomination by the Republican convention and shortly afterward, when the campaign was put under way, he suggested the slogan, "A Full Dinner Pail."

ALBERT VARNER

Buckingham, Que., May 8th, 1915.
"For seven years, I suffered terribly from Severe Headaches and Indigestion. I had belching gas from the stomach, bitter stuff would come up into my mouth after eating, while at times I had nausea and vomiting, and had chronic Constipation. I went to several doctors and wrote to a specialist in Boston but without benefit. I tried many remedies but nothing did me good. Finally, a friend advised "Fruit-a-tives". I took this grand fruit medicine and it made me well.
