The New Year

Bay Chas Collins

The opening of the year impresses us with the thought that we are starting out on an unknown way in which we must walk by faith and not by sight. was the beautiful custom of one of the English hings to head every letter and every new page of his journal with the words, "In Nomine Jesu, Amen." Let us write this in holy faith and consecrated purpose at the top of the year page we are now turning.

Since New Years resolutions are in order, let us resolve, God helping us, to read lots and think more, to be kind and honest, to keep busy and cheerful, and to believe the best of everybody.

And may we remember what Dr. Johnson said in his old age: "I have been resolving for forty-five years, now I take hold upon God."

The passing of the years is like the weaver's shuttle, the shepherd's tent, the swift ships, the eagle hastening to its prey, the shadow that declineth, the fading flower, the withering grass, the ebbing tide, a tale that is told. Simile and metaphor is exhausted to depict the swift passing of this, our earthly life, but the very brevity of this earthly life is a rebuke to those who ilve for this life alone.

This brevity should be a trumpet call to preparation for a life that knows no brevity nor end. May the closing year with its sharp reminder of time's swift flight, be to us all the prophecy of a new and grander year wherein the pledge and promise of the "life more abundant" shall be seen and felt.

The fishermen of Brittany have a prayer they offer as they launch their boats out into the sea. "Keep us O God: our boats are so small and the ocean is so wide."

Life for each one of us is an uncharted sea with an ever changing shore line and horizon, and this beautiful prayer is a fitting one for us to offer as we launch out upon the unknown bosom of nineteen hundred seventeen.

The year that is gone need not be wasted. We may let it be our teacher and see to it that its failures and mistakes are not repeated. The future is ours. Let us build a bigger soul.

"Build thee more stately mansions O my soul;" God cannot put a big heaven into a little soul any more than you can put the sea into a pint measure.

Let us do with our might whatsoever our hand finds to do. The world is in need. There are poor to help, weak to protects tempted to sustain, discouraged to cheer, wronged tochampion and defend, blind eyes to open, deaf ears to unstop, lame feet to make strong. This is the work God wants done. To-day is our work day. The night is coming on. Let us do our work well. So shall we grow.

And God will not change.

God will not change. The restless years may bring sunlight and shade—the glories of the spring, joy mixed with grief-sharp thornes with fragrant

Earth lights may shine awhile and then grow dim. But Gcd is true: There is no change in Him.
