

Among Our Neighbors

South Hill

Davis Hill

April 26. — Arbor Day on which our contribution should be a tree. Again South Hill is on the map and our "fighters" in the procession, as Andover's road men and teams were two days of last week repairing our highway. Much discarded stone wall disappeared as ballast, making the preliminary work on our new macadam road which is to come later don't you know?

"Where in Alfred Center is Vinegar Hill?"

It's between the Vandermark and the railroad.

Somebody had to start a settlement before the people knew where they wanted a village, like Alfred Center, and Vinegar Hill was settled long before there was a Village of Alfred Center.

Alfred Center is a place in the Town of Alfred about two miles above what used to be called Baker's Bridge, in the days when the railroad was built. Alfred Center is now known on the map as Alfred, and is the seat of a university.

Vinegar Hill is located in the Town of Andover and covers much more territory than Alfred Center. It is situated north of the railroad in some places, but as you get farther east on the railroad it is west of the railroad. You can get there from almost any direction if you get started on the right road and follow it there.

You can get there from Angelica or from Greenwood, if you know the way.

The interesting store's advertisements in this section, left Monday for Lawrence, Mich., where she will visit friends before returning to her western home.
