"FAIRY PRINCE" VERY HUMAN

Once More Illustrating the Wide Gulf Sometimes Existing Between Romance and Reality.

As the crowded elevator car swooped down from eighteen to ten she became aware that there was a man just behind her left elbow. Her consciousness of him was somehow intensified by the exhilaration of the moment. Curiously counseled looking around. Pride forbade it. She felt a burning sensation in the part of her left cheek which was visible beneath her hat brim. Elizabeth Houghton writes in the New York World.

Bump, slam, swoop! the car inched its way down. Ten floors are not too few for the creation of a fairy prince. At the eighth floor he was tall and slender with a lock of hair falling over his forehead, at the seventh he had rather deep-set eyes and stern, straight brows.

As they passed the fifth she decided that he wore a necktie of grayish-blue which undoubtedly matched the peculiar blue of his eyes. Just then a fat man pushed his way in and forced her against the wall. But she hardly noticed this.

She was planning the encounter. Daintily she would step from the car, adjusting her fur collar so that the worn lining should be hidden — he would follow closely, and in well-modulated tones ask if he might take her home.

"Main floor — last stop!" bawled the elevator boy. She found herself hurrying madly along the marble floor, hearing the tap, tap of her own heels and a heavy tread close behind! It was, it must be the fairy prince! At the door of the big office building she stopped, a little breathless.

"Hello, Cutie!" smote raucously in her ear. "Wait an arm across the street?"

A tiny figure in a grotesquely rakish green plaid cap smiled up at her, disclosing in the front of his mouth a gleaming gold tooth!

PRICE

The price of a thing is the amount that we exchange for it, not in money, but in personal happiness, comfort and mental satisfaction.

To the experienced individual the mere fact that undue emphasis is placed upon price, inspires caution. The cheapest motor car, therefore, is not that which sells for the least nor is it that which sells for the most. It is that which best satisfies our sense of color, gratifies our feelings, does not offend our hearing, possesses an atmosphere that is individual, appeases our good taste, and possesses that rare sixth sense — balance.
