Of Interest to Farmers

USE SILAGE AS SOON AS DAIRYMAN WISHES

Idea That Certain Time Must Elapse After Silo Filling Not Sound, Specialists Say

What is the best time to begin feeding silage, is a question which is interesting many New York dairy farmers, judging from the inquiries being received by the State College at Ithaca.

The specialists on livestock feeding reply that the time to begin using silage is when the dairyman needs it; they feel there is no justification for the idea that a certain time must elapse between the filling of the silo and opening it for use.

Experiments made at the state colleges of the country indicate that fermentation starts almost as soon as the corn is placed in the silo, and that the greatest change takes place during the first five days after filling. After twelve days, fermentation is practically complete, and the silage undergoes very little modification after two weeks.

Some farmers do not know that silage will keep for a long time. Experiments indicate that silage is as palatable after several years as that which has been kept only a few months.

Altho moldy silage apparently does not injure mature cows, it has been found to affect the health of calves and horses. To be on the safe side, careful farmers discard the moldy silage from the top of the silo.

BOSSY NEEDS LIME AND SO DO BABIES

Since Cow Must Get it From Her Food "Sweeten Sour Soil," is Suggested Slogan

Cows need lime and so do babies. Cows get their lime from their feed, babies from the milk they drink.

This is one argument used in encouraging a wider use of lime on New York soils. "Sweeten sour soil" is one slogan being used. It is pointed out, first of all, that since the cow gives off much lime in her milk, her body needs must be supplied in some way, else both cow and babies suffer.

While all dairy feeds contain some lime, clover, alfalfa, soy-beans, peas and others classed as "legumes," contain more lime than do such crops as corn, oats, timothy and redtop.

Since these legumes cannot be grown successfully on land which is very deficient in lime, it naturally follows, claim the soils men at the State Agricultural College, that the land must be limed. They go so far as to say that about four-fifths of the agricultural area of New York State is in need of generous liming for good growth of clover and alfalfa.
