

Sign-Boards on the Up-Road

by Hamilton B. Williams

The top of the morning, every morning of the year—to you all. And after a good day along the trail, winding thru beautiful gardens of flowers and hearts, a quiet evening and slumber and dreams.

If we shall find happiness it will be well to look in our own dooryard and house and heart.

If I had magic I should fit every one with his particular task, a task in which he could express himself perfectly, a task which would call forth all his "love-taps."

I should give every man the right woman, and every woman the right man—for life demands good fellowship, a strong man respected for his labor and character; a woman very fit to her family.

And, seeing God has so many little folks clustering about His garden, I would have every home radiant with children.

And I would have for every one so many friends he would not be able to number them.

Beautiful may your hearth be with dreams dancing in the flames.

And be laid the ghosts of fear and want and poverty that they do not gloom the homes of men and women.

And may the Friend, who built the Road up, be with us all.

In our joy, let us remember that it becomes surpassingly exquisite and multiplied—if we let it kindle other hearts.

In our peace, let us remember that that is the meaning of the Christ's coming, the true objective of all religion. It is always of God—peace.

In our hearth, let us remember that the weak are committed to the strong; a merry heart is good medicine.

In our culture, remember the multitude who joined hands and souls and spirits beneficently to glad us with the beautiful. Let us forget not the prisoners whose eyes and ears and hands are fettered by incapacity!

The man in the ditch and the man on the hills—consider why the gulf?

In our friendships, remember the lonesome folks who are lost, hungry and thirsty in deserts of people, in wildernesses of streets.

Which one are we on the Jericho trail?

If we possess God it is so because our houses are fit for His Spirit's habitation. He stays only in clean and garnished homes, but He comes wherever a soul, how cumbered with sin and misery, wants Him.

He never utters fences nor beats down fast-shut gates.

I reverence the Lord Jesus because He was so compassionate toward the sinners. He knew what they were missing by missing the joyous God.

The top of the morning—to come to you.

We want to be good and gentle and courteous, kindly, sweet-tempered and slow to wrath—easy to get it, seeing we are God's children.

People will believe we are kin of God if we are kind. His children go more than half-way toward people.

Let us be good first—and then we shall not be troubled at our neighbor's way of naming his religious notions. It is very difficult to hide goodness.

Let us be good, and we'll not need to say "we've come in the name of the Lord."

Let us be good, and we'll wonder why people like us around. But people will not wonder.

Let us be good and every morning will offer wonderful gardens to enter. God will be thinking of plans for our happiness.

A year of 365 big days, full, bright days, all too short for all we've planned to do.

A year of self-forgetting and the kingdom will be coming swiftly.

The top of the morning, my comrade, to you.
