Rude Rural Rhymes

Faith and Workers

The other night I had a dream— I somehow came, as it would seem, to where I saw and heard Saint Peter presiding on his judgment seat. One man appeared in Peter's grist, who said, "I'm fundamentalist." I hold unspooled by modern taints the creed delivered to the Saints. The Holy Bible— I receive and every syllable believe." Then Peter answered, "Good for you, but tell me now, what did you do? Did all the Bible's words of power fruit in your life from hour to hour? Believing Christ was very God, did you seek out the path he trod, and did you aim your brother's feet, or did you travel easy streets? Now while the first man paused and pondered, to Peter's court another wandered. Said he "I'm in your jurisdiction, but since I'm in your jurisdiction, I'll say while in the witness box that I am scarcely orthodox. I think that Christ was wholly human, the son of man as well as woman. The way mankind are constituted is proof that they have evolved, not perfect made by their Creator, but growing ever less to greater." Said Peter, "Since you held it true that Christ was but a man like you, I wonder did you try to be as kind and good a man as he. You think mankind, tho' sprung from slime, are going upward all the time. Say brother, did you help them climb?" I do not know what was the fate that Peter gave each candidate. My dream had kinder petersed out, but left me lots to think about.

A good resolution is to treat the porcelain sinks and tubs right this year; harsh abrasives and scouring powders take off both stains and finish.
