Rude Rural Rhymes

Hope Deferred

When we were making excavation to place that new garage foundation, well down within the top soil zone we came upon an old beef bone. O where is now the hopeful pup who dragged it there and holed it up. Said he, "This beef bone rightly placed will soon be ripened to my taste, and when I pull it out, by gee, all other pups will envy me." O hope deferred, O chance and change, the tyke has gone from off the range, gone hide and hair and fleas and mange. What drove the memory from his mind of that good bone he left behind? Perhaps some roving rival bit him, perhaps some reckless auto, hit him, and so his bone in later time became the backbone of my rhyme, and gave a moral too, for we have buried hopes the same as he. We fondly dream that every morrow holds more of joy and less of sorrow. We'll take more time to live our lives, enjoy our friends and kiss our wives. But death comes soon to draw the curtain and future joys are plumb uncertain. It's wiser far for prince and peasant to grab a tail hold on the present, enjoy the moment ere they leave it for once it's gone they can't retrieve it. The passing hour returns no more, and like that puppy long of yore, we chew its beef bones never more. —BOB ADAMS

For One's Wedding Day

Here Comes the Bride

A vision of loveliness in white satin, with pearls at her throat and about her a floating cloud of tulle. A very picture bride, indeed! But modern withal, from the crown of lovely hair to the tips of her dainty slippers. Not for her the ponderous beauty of former years, the wedding gown that was worn once and then tucked away for a lifetime.

For her, the beauty of today. The simple girlish beauty that makes wedding costumes so appealing. The kind that will exhibit their loveliness many, many days after the wedding day. For them, youth and laughter, not the cedar chest and obscurity.

In fact, her honeymoon costumes are chosen with equal care. An ensemble suit for traveling, an evening costume of charm clothes for each hour of the day—all must be ultra-smart.

Brides and mothers of brides—let us show you our exquisite apparel for that great day of days and equally lovely apparel for going away.

BRIDAL and GRADUATION EVENTS

ASSEMBLED IN ANTICIPATION OF THE NEAR FUTURE NEEDS

These ravishingly beautiful bits of daintiness in textile development are the latest that the style world needs and demands. They are here in plenty of time for their need. These numerous weaves are also carried extensively in all the new shades and tints.

The bride or Graduate can find in this superb collection anything and everything that is correct and new. Our exceptionally large showing has been commented on as the equal in selection of institutions many times our size, and in much larger cities. We believe we offer our friends, patrons and transients a real service.
