Good Natured

We hear it said of Bill or Dan that he's a most good-natured man, because his laughter fills the shack, because he slaps you on the back with many a joke and jovial crack. But if he lives a single life and has no kids and has no wife, no need to care for aught beside the comfort of his bones and hide, "good-natured" should not be applied. I claim that such a cheerful bird knows not one half nor yet one third the very meaning of the word. But men with wives like me and you to think of things for them to do, who have some little Jims and Jacks to devil 'round and dog their tracks, yet seldom bawl somebody out, good-natured are beyond a doubt. You know a maiden just your style, who always meets you with a smile. You oft remark anent the same that she's an even-tempered dame. She may be all your fancies paint and yet it may be that she ain't. But if with some rough-neck to please and three-four kids about her knees she seldom reads the riot act she's even-tempered for a fact. I joy to sing the mother's praise; she gladdens all our dreary days and helps to smooth earth's ratty ways. In heaven they'll greet her with a hymn, and chasing all the cherubim off where their yells can't reach her ears, they'll let her rest a million years.—BOB ADAMS.
