The child at school is in the hazardous position of possible exposure to communicable disease.

To allow a child with a possibly contagious disease to go to school is to endanger the others.

The head of every household is required by law to report any condition that may be transmissible to the health officer, when no other physician is in attendance.

The heads of household should comply with the requirements of law because it is their duty as good citizens and for the good of the community and not because failure to comply is punishable.

Pupils should avoid exchanging the secretions of nose and mouth by refraining from exchange or borrowing of handkerchiefs, books, papers, pencils, gum, candy, lunches, etc.

Bring a clean handkerchief or cloth to school each day.

Keep the nose clean.
