This writer has bought a little higher than for ordinary corn many a carload. The "power crop" of Maine should any case, and the advantage of using bring to the state millions of dollars every month, without the inconvenience of fighting potato bugs.

Nothing comes suddenly. It took a long time and several revolutions for the humble bourgeoisie to take pewer from kings, nobles and clergy thus increasing a thousandfold the number of those with a share in life's !" good things. And the merchants, the "money men" did not gain power except as they learned how to use it. I' The next step along the path of democracy will be another increase in the number of earth's children that share its property. That step will be taken when the great crowd Rearns how to rule itself and finds competent leaders that won't be-If our men of power have any in-
