By ROSE DAWSON

The beginning of good sportsmanship was found in Greece and among the early Romans. It dates back as far as the early Grecian and Roman athletes. These athletes practiced running and other sports develop strength of mind and body. They prided themselves on their purity of heart and cleanliness character. Even among the knights of old, good sportsmanship was admired and dealing fairly and honorably with an opponent, was one of | the chief characteristics of a true Good sportsmanship when J conducted right tends to develop in the boy or girl, keenness, sagacity and strength. Sportsmanship is developed in our! school by means of basket ball, foot. ball and baseball. When a player! steps upon a basket ball court, ready for a game with his opponents, his first idea is, or should be, the playing of a fair, clean game. He must l use tact, energy, keeness and alertness. He is filled, or should be filled, with a deep sense of scholastic pride and loyalty to the team.
