stop for every form of special observance, but Childle. Health Day will not be amiss if it brings to the atten-la. tion of everyone the need for conserving child life. Forty thousand school children die every year from causes that are preventable—a needless waste of life.

Of all crippled adults, one-third receive their injuries during the first six years of life and a very large percentage are needlessly handicapped. Giving thought to the ideal which Child Health

Day presents will work wonders in the health and hap- in. piness of the people, for to have good health is the first requisite of happiness, and a happy people are invariably successful, prosperous people, and good citizens.
