MAN the Mechanical

Evolutionists sometimes describe man as the tool-using animal. If they fail to include woman in this description, it may be out of politeness—or perhaps it is because they have watched her doing her house-work.

Set a man to daily dusting, cleaning, washing, cooking—and it wouldn't be long before he equipped himself with vacuum cleaners, washing machines, electric ranges and every other electrically operated, labor-saving household device.

Can it be because the men usually hold the purse-strings that so many women are condemned to needless drudgery all their lives? We do not believe it for a minute—not when the men once understand.

is today. You cannot buy a full wool suit for the same price you would pay for a half wool and cotton suit. This same argument applies to every line of merchandise. Try to buy a five dollar gold piece for less than its Government standardized value and see how successful you are. So don't expect "something for nothing." Your own judgment and knowledge of values are what you should be governed by. Don't use snap judgment. Your merchant in your community will only too willingly assist in explaining values to you. He is more capable of doing this than the merchant outside of your community, because he knows and is interested in you. It } mains to their last resting place at swinging it around.
