Life-Savers

Few men realize the daily drudgery and hard physical labor of housework. No single job requires great strength. The work is spread out thin, but it is spread all through the day—every day!

A comparatively small sum of money invested in electrically operated household devices will take at least half the physical labor out of a woman's daily work in the

For many a woman these electrical appliances have proved a great deal more than labor-savers. In many homes they have been savers of health and happiness—and in not a few cases veritable life-savers.
