The Laborer is Worthy of his Hire

Everyone who travels on the railroads nowadays appreciates the vast improvement that has recently taken place in the quality and regularity of service. Yet few people stop to realize that this vastly improved service results from the fact that the railroads are now getting a fair return.

You cannot expect to get good service out of a financially crippled public utility. Really good service can be given only when a utility is making a reasonable profit on the invested capital. Good service is worth what it costs. The laborer is worthy of his hire.
