We are inclined to hold that nothing shall stand in the way of economic progress. Economic progress is a good thing, but we should not sacrifice too much to it. There are two garments that have no pockets-1. the dress of a baby and a shroud. We bring no financial wealth here when we come and we can take none away when we go.

Economic progress deals with the substance materiality. Traditional reverence is a character qualification. If it is a wholesome tradition and we appreciate the ideal it stands for, then it is a thing that we will take with us when we leave this sphere. Consequently, it is not wise to trample constructive tradi-i, tion under the heel of material advancement.

It has a most wholesome effect on people to surround them with concrete evidences of the labors, t sacrifices and the achievements which represent fundamental principles of their forefathers.
