air safe for human breathing. If the people in their homes, working places and streets can be kept constantly in good air, the respiratory diseases that annually slay thousands will be controlled and the average length of life materially extended.

CCIENTISTS who specialize in combatting disease

It is recognized that the task is not merely for the doctors and health officers. It must have the cooperation of all the people. The procedure is likened to that which brought about an entire change of attitude toward the making, handling, distribution and marketing of food, and the safeguarding of public wat er supplies.

For ages human life had been menaced by diseases promoted by lack of sanitation and the consump tion of polluted food and water. Finally when people generally became aware of their peril, pure food laws were enacted; manufacturers and merchants made virtue of keeping all food stuffs free from contam' tion and public authorities began to take special pains to insure pure water supplies for every- communit Typhoid and other epidemic diseases at once were lessened in severity and frequency and thousands of live were saved.

Careless Walkers

. THE pedestrian is regarded in some quarters almost as an anachorism. This is the day of speedy transportation, when street cars and automobiles are used for short distances and little errands as well as for activities covering greater distances. The occasional mortal who not only has no car but who still honestly enjoys going about his day's business on foot is therefore

He is deservedly frowned upon when he walks carelessly on highways. It is true that too little provision has been made along motor routes to take care of those who must walk that way.
