A UNIT of wooden bridge builders up in Canada got their heads together and after a few meetings organized a union. Things were going along pretty well when one day the man for whom they were completing a handsome rustic timber viaduct came along and began a conversation. He found some details in the construction that did not seem to be in the plans and specifications. "Bring me the blueprints," he said.

The foreman unrolled a sheaf of plans drawn to scale and began During the conversation the owner of the bridge pulled out a lead pencil and began to sharpen it. "I'll show you just what Suddenly the foreman made a sign and the whole gang dropped their tools and sat down. "What's the idea?" asked the capitalist

"Well, mister, the boys saw you sharpening that lead pencil." "What of it. I ask you?" "I'll tell you." retorted the foreman with a touch of finality in his voice. "Whittling wood in any way, shape or manner on this contract is
