Her eyes took in her immediate surroundings. She was obviously on a wide street or avenue of a large city, for crowds of men and women hurried past her, and all around! there were imposing buildings and shops with flaunting window displays. The street held nothing she could recognize; yet she had a frantic feeling that she really knew it very well. Occasionally she caught words uttered in the throng, and these clearly carried their meaning to her brain; but no one spoke to her and no one looked at her closely.

A passing stranger gave her quick and curious glance. Why? She quickened her pace till she reached the corner; standing there, close to the curb, she looked up and down, as if waiting for a bus. Looking down at her hands, she had discovered that she was carrying a small bag. In it, surely, she would find cards, or a note book, letter or some other clue to her

She drew farther away from the waiting group and with trembling fingers opened the bag. Like most of the bags women carry, it was divided into two compartments, a center one, closed for bank notes, and coins, and the remaining space for miscellaneous possessions. She snapped open the center compartment and notes and silver, which she did not take time to examine. She closed with a throb of thankfulness least she was not destitute)
