Again and again Mayer came; up against the black wail. He retreated from it so tactfully that he seemed not to touch it. But he learned young Mrs. Hamilton's present preferences, and something about the recent plays she had seen, as well as her impression of a new book or two, and his interest in her deepened. He was vastly impressed, as Carrick had been, by the poise; and dignity of this groping figure that moved toward him thru such a .fog. His vivid imagination pictured
