The Policy of Honesty

"THE average person is honest with other people's I money, but the same cannot be said about his relation to his own personal finances," says Sarah J. Mac-Leod, home economics expert of a large bank. "The cial responsibilities for both the present and the future, to make a definite plan in writing which provides for all obligations, to keep track of expenses and to compare the actual figures with the planned expenditures frequently to see how closely one is reaching his goal. Lack of definite standards for using one's income is the basis of most money troubles." In which Miss MacLeod has hit the old nail square ly on the head. There is a certain lack of vision abou what life is for which seems at the bottom of most money troubles. People don't know what they want to get out of life. They spend years trying to have the things on their backs and in their houses that other people have. Then they find themselves in later lif with no interests but those of "keeping up"-and if statistics are to be believed, with no means to keep up

Lovely things to wear and use, lovely things look at and enjoy, are desirable without question. more desirable still is that peace of mind which comes from being honest with one's self and one's fellows. #### Sidewalk Traffic Jams

THERE is one sort of traffic congestion to which the regulators have paid no attention. That is the con gestion on the overcrowded sidewalks in the central section of most cities during certain hours of the day, the noon hour in particular. Many pedestrians appear to forget, or maybe they never knew, about the "rule of the road" that applies to them. Of course the majority pass to the right in meeting and to the left in overtaking other walkers, but far too many "buck the traffic" in the wrong direction. This makes for confusion.

There is another thoughtless trick that makes trouble. That is the tendency of groups of three or four persons to stand in the middle of the sidewalks to engage in conversation, utterly disregarding the fact that the stream of travel has to wind around them. The time may come when the convenience the public will call for traffic 'cops" for pedestrians who says that the world will pass out in a gigantic exas well as for wheeled traffic.

Behind Our Actions

THE great question with our philosophers at the present time seems to be why men act in such and such ways—why they behave as they do. It is, of course, an important question.
