Baby Plane Makes Visit
A baby airplane, manned by a 17-year-old pilot, attracted considerable attention on the Stanards flying field Sunday night and early Monday as the pair made Wellsville a stopping place overnight.

The plane, a Curtis-Wright Junior was equipped with a three cylinder 45-horsepower engine, mounted on top of the wings, directly over the passenger seat. The propeller faced the tail of the plane and the gas tank, also located on top, near the engine, held only eight gallons of gas.

The young pilot had travelled from Pittsburgh Sunday and was headed toward Binghamton. He reached Wellsville about dusk. The plane, he said, had a cruising speed of about 60 miles per hour, and could land in a small space. Because of the small amount of gas, it was necessary to make frequent stops.

The planes are used mainly for practice flights near fields. The youth filled it up with gas, warmed up the motor and headed toward Binghamton.

The trouble is that the men who do not believe in government, church marriage, law and property, insist on living among people who do.
