As the prices of other foods rise, milk tends more and more to become the most economical food to buy. Milk has risen in price during this depression, but it has not risen proportionately
with other food products. Consequently, milk becomes increasingly the greatest food bargain.
Milk and dairy products are good food buys always, especially because of their superior food value. Milk is the paramount food children must have in order to maintain health and growth.
Lack of sufficient milk in the diet of children results in bad teeth and soft bones, due to a deficiency of calcium and phosphorus which milk so abundantly supplies in the form in which they can be assimilated and incorporated into the body directly. Milk also supplies the very necessary food elements of iron and copper.

Food Elements in Milk Milk and dairy products are the only sources of a peculiarly complete and easily digested form of protein. This particular protein is essential to the growth, health and life of every body cell. It is an essential part of all muscle tissue, a Sub-Strainer Food: A quart of milk a day for every child makes this peculiar and important type of protein economically and attractively available.
