HOW, WHAT and WHY?

The Andover News has arranged with the office of publication of the New York State Colleges of Agriculture and Home Economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home.

If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope and mention the name of this paper you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card.

Snow Fence Harm
J. K. writes: "A snow fence has been run up near my strawberry bed. Will the extra snow injure the plants?"

Professor J. Oskamp of the pomology department answers: "As a rule, I think, the additional snow cover would help to prevent damage from spring frosts by holding back the growth of the plants. The added snow, also, will add to the soil moisture which should be beneficial."

Straightening Silos
R. T. B. asks: "How can silos of the usual wood-slab and hoop construction be straightened when they come out of plumb?"

The answer from the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Washington: "It is very hard to straighten a silo after it is racked. With a plain silo bound with iron hoops, two wheels or braced hoops should be made to fit inside the silo, one at the bottom and one at the top. This prevents a collapse of the silo when it is straightened."

"To plumb this type of silo, pull the top with a block and tackle or brace the leaning side with props. After the structure is erect all hoops should be tightened. Make sure that the staves are properly located."

"Stave silos that have splines or tongue and grooved, or shiplapped joints can be straightened only with much effort if at all, because of the friction in the splines and locked joints."

"You may be lucky to straighten your wood-slab silo with the interior bracing as suggested; but hope for success is not too encouraging unless conditions are very favorable and great care is used to plumb the structure gradually. In many instances it is considered advisable to take down the silo carefully and to rebuild it. This gives a tighter structure and lessens the damage to the staves and other parts."

THINGS WORTH KNOWING
There are more than 70 insurance companies doing business in California.

One-fourth of the land area of the United States is in forests. Australia cites increased sales of electric current as one of the results of improved conditions.

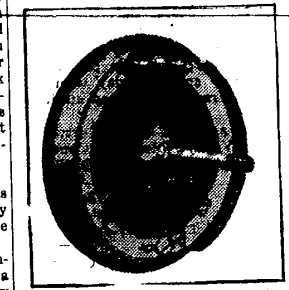

Workers repairing a railroad dock at Detroit have found the unfinished tunnel to Canada, which was started and abandoned 50 years ago.

Ranchers in northern Australia are using airplanes with huge eyes painted under the wings to frighten away tribesmen who spear cattle in preference to native game.

Recently air force machines, which have a bull's eye marker, toured the cattle country and the blacks, thinking these were eyes watching them, discontinued their cattle thefts.

Brakes New Feature On New Ford V-8

Brakes of an entirely new design, requiring less pedal pressure while at the same time providing more effective braking control, are an important feature of the new Ford V-8 for 1935, according to Guy S. Wood, local Ford dealer.

The brakes are of the self-centering type, with a new floating wedge which aids in equalizing the pressure applied to each of the two brake shoes in each wheel. Shoe linings have been shortened and their width has been increased 16 per cent, making full utilization of the brake lining and providing greater braking effectiveness.

The new brakes have fewer operating parts than formerly and are easier to adjust, a single fool-proof adjustment making equalization of each brake positive and easy.

The major's old mouth hardened. "Gordon called me up late last night—wanted to know about selling some securities," he ruminated aloud, more to himself than to Angie. "He had about five thousand in Liberty bonds."

THE DOLLAR BRIDE

(Continued from Page Two) Urged her almost violently; he urged her down his pride. She broke away shaking all over; anger and shame and fear held her. "You promised to let me go you said you didn't want a wife who didn't have you. I don't know what I don't know."

He let her go and stood like a man stunned suddenly to stone. "Good-bye, Richard forgive me, good-bye."

Angie Fuller kept house for her uncle. Major Lomax had never married. There had been an early and a tragic love affair. Diana Aylett had accidentally shot herself on the eve of their marriage. It was hard to associate romance with the old major. Yet there had been a love affair that seared.

When the smoke of that tragedy cleared away, Lomax found it had killed the power to love another woman. And once, in the Gordon's garden, he had caught Nancy Virginia reaching high for a sprig of lilac. She looked for just a minute as Diana had looked the day she died. Nancy did not know why the old man stared at her. She tossed the sprig of lilac to him.

The old man put it in his button-hole, patted her hand, and went on. Nancy had no idea she had won a champion for all time.

The morning after Nancy's return, Angie had to get the breakfast. She came into the dining room, her face rose from the fire.

She set the plate of rusks down in front of her uncle, and retired behind the old silver coffee pot. She was thinking of Rod Gordon.

It was the first time he had ever been in town without coming to see her. They were old neighbors; they had been boy and girl sweethearts. He had walked straight by the house and never looked at it, and Nancy had said nothing about his visit home! What did it mean?

Major Lomax ate a piece of rusk with an audible crunch and turned over his newspaper.

"Hello!" he exclaimed, stopping to read an advertisement more carefully. "The Gordon house for sale—whole outfit—furniture and all."

Angie was astonished. A shaft of terror shot thru her. Had something happened to Roddy? "Why, uncle, it just can't be—they love the old house so!"

He shoved the paper across to her. "Read that," he said crossly. He was cross because, like Angie, a shaft of alarm had shot thru him. He had heard something from a cousin of his in New York, old Beaver, accountant in the Greenough Trust Company.

Old Beaver said Roddy was running after a fast woman and was in debt. Lomax knew that William Gordon's resources were narrow. Trouble somewhere? The major's old mouth hardened.

"Gordon called me up late last night—wanted to know about selling some securities," he ruminated aloud, more to himself than to Angie. "He had about five thousand in Liberty bonds."
