Plan.

The uses farmers are making of Federal Housing Modernization loans vary greatly, but most of them tend to better the farm business, says J. E. Davis, farm representative of the F. H. A. in New York State.

One dairyman is tearing down an old barn to make an addition to his dairy barn so that he can keep milking cows, young stock, hay, and feed all under the same roof, reports Mr. Davis. Another has put a new roof on a barn where leakage spoiled a good deal of hay last year.

"A former dairyman is turning poultryman and makes use of an F. H. A. loan to turn a small barn into a three-deek poultry house. Another poultryman just doubled thisize of his laying house and plans to make the extra eggs pay for the construction.

"Each of these men have made a
