A AYBE I am a little bit lazy. But why not? There's the house and the children to take care of, meals to plan, clothes to wash and iron. Always something. So when I can take a rest-or a shortcuttake it! For that reason I'm glad electricity is so cheap. It helps with so many jobs Take ironing: my electric ironer does it for a few cents a week and in a few hours. To me, electricity is the shortest way ground So I use a lot of it. I can afford it, because rate reductions have brought the cost so low. And the more I use the less each kilowatt hour costs: like buying oranges by the dozen instead of singly.

gerous to cross the road than to visit a battle front. It's time to take it. for granted that an automobile can travel twice as fast as it should, except on a race track. It's time to hammer home the lesson of safety, not the lust for speed. It can be done, in part, by sending reckless drivers to jail, by punishing hit-and-run murderers to the limit of the law, by forbidding the use of the roads to drunks, by taking licenses away from young fools, until they are old enough to be trusted with machinery. But those who write automobile advertising must do their share by cutting out the ballyhoo for speed. Americans are suckers for such stuff, and 34,000 of them died the highways last year to prove it!
