SOME SIMPLE RULES ABOUT EATING

There are some points—I must call them rules—that I feel pretty safe in abiding by, subject to very moderate amending for special cases—I will mention a few.

I have learned that the adult man needs at least one meat ration a day, cooked in the manner he likes it best. The working man needs more meat than the housed man. I do not permit heavy meats for the evening meal.

The adult human body needs one or two eggs daily, cooked as the individual prefers.

I prefer cooked fruits to raw fruits, as a rule. From the producer to the consumer these days, may pass the viand thru a dozen pairs of more or less dirty hands. It takes more than a casual rinsing to remove germs; cooking does the work. Stewed dried fruits are my absolute favorites for winter eating.

The fruit portion of a meal, roughly speaking, may furnish from one-third to one-half the volume of the ration. We, as a nation, eat too little of well-selected fruits.

We do not give enough attention to the volume of water taken. A patient weighing 150 pounds should drink a total of a half-gallon of water daily. Don't await thirst, if you are sedentary. Get the habit of drinking methodically.

I am asked often "Shall I drink milk?" This by people who are merely run down from overstrain of affairs, I ask, "do you like it?" — "Yes." "Then drink it." But if the answer is "No, I can't say I like it, but have been told it's good for me," then I say, "Take a glass now and then, but abandon it if it causes distress."

Safety Message To Reach Empire State's Motorists

THOUSANDS of motorists in all parts of New York state will have the above message driven home to them from outdoor advertising poster boards during these next few months. This dramatic and effective poster was conceived by Harold Hayden, nationally recognized poster artist, and was contributed to the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles by the Central New York Motorists to the interest of highway safety. It will be placed in prominent positions by owners of outdoor advertising plants who will contribute space on their boards free of charge to promote this cause.
