Bible School Lesson

By REV. CHARLES E. DUNN

Jesus, the Light of the World Lesson for Feb. 7th. John 9:1-11. Golden Text: John 8-12.

The significance of our lesson theme is well expressed by Holman Hunt's striking painting, "The Light of the World." The picture represents the Master clad in a priestly robe over which there hangs a royal outer garment fit only for kings. The latter is fastened with a wondrous brooch. One side is studded like Aaron's breast-plate, with the twelve stones of the tribes of Israel, and so represents the Covenant of the Law. On the other side flash the stones of the foundations of the New Jerusalem, a reminder of the Covenant of Grace. Between them, with an arm stretched out to each, is a Cross, a testimony to the sublime truth that in Jesus' death both the old and the new find their ultimate meaning.

Upon the head of Jesus are two crowns, one of gold, a token of his right to rule, and the other of thorns placed there by his enemies as a symbol of their hate. But one notes, upon close inspection, that these thorns have miraculously blossomed into leaves "that shall be for the healing of the nations."

In his left hand the Saviour holds a lantern to guide him thru the thickly wooded wild he has entered. His right hand is placed upon a door long shut, for the lengthy stems of hardy shoots have firmly entrenched themselves upon it. And it is suggestive that no knob appears. The artist seems to want to say, "When Christ knocks at the door of human heart, it must be opened from the inside."

The whole appealing composition, with its elaborate detail and lovely coloring, superbly heralds, in pictorial speech, the glorious words of our Golden Text, "I am the light of

LISTENING TO MUSIC

By Harry A. King Associate Head, Music Dept. Fredonia State Normal School (Special to Andover News)

With this release begins a series of five articles discussing the subject of music. Most of the articles will deal with "Listening to Music." Part 1.

Are you going to turn on your radio tonight? If so, there is a probability that you will hear some type of music. Surveys of radio programs show that music is the popular type of radio presentation, and that the lighter type of swing music is performed more frequently than its substantial brother, the so-called classical music.

How do you listen to music? How do others listen to music? When you turn on your radio and hear the music streaming forth do you realize that you are listening in a manner that is a combination of your present mood and attitude, plus your individual inherent physical and mental make-up and whatever the musical training or environmental experiences you might have had?

Radio music of a general emotional type can function as the background to a hand at bridge, "a date," the experimentation with a novel kitchen recipe, or the reading of this article. As such, all the listener requires of the music is that it provide a satisfactory tonal background for his mood. If the music is of a general emotional content favorable to bridge or cake-baking, then his feeling towards it is one of passive receptivity. Music in this sense acts as a handmaiden art. It enriches or enhances the meaning of some other activity.

Strange as it may seem, with the exception of the virtuoso concert, music always acts in conjunction with other arts or assists with other activities. And so we have music for drama and the movie; music for religious gatherings and purposes of worship; music for the physical expression of dancing; music for the call to arms and the charge of battle; music for matrimony; music for burial; in fact, whenever there is an event of unusual significance, music is called upon to give that event deeper and more poignant meaning. The emotional field of music is unrestricted. Its flow of melody, its rhythm and its cadences and transitions can adapt themselves to all situations and feelings. It is indeed a great and powerful art.

Only five of the states now place no limits, either by the day or week, on the working hours of women. "the world." But it reminds us even more of that other noble verse, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."
